collet for cleansing the skin, and leave it on for several hours. V. G.: Shoulder blades that stick out from the backbone are an ugly deformity. It is more apparent in thin people. This condition can be cured by strengthening the muscles of the shoulder blades in the following way: Stand straight with the legs together and clasp the hands low down behind the back. Then roll the shoulder blades backwards until the bones nearly touch, afterwards relaxing. Repeat many times.

Miss G. H.: Some people prefer a night bath, and many would rather take a bath in the morning. Bath at night, I think, induces restful sleep. If a bath is not taken at night, a rub off with a damp towel that has been wrung out in warm water is good. It is refreshing. A good drying by a warm, soft towel should follow. A daily bath is absolutely necessary to perfect cleanliness and health. The temperature of your bath should be decided upon by yourself. Some people can stand cold baths, and some cannot.

M. J.: The three articles you ask me about are proprietary articles, and I cannot give information on articles which are purchased in the market. Henna is a dye. It gives dark hair a reddish tinge, and makes light hair a slight brown. It appears in the hair, and cannot give formulas for them. Better think twice before you use it. It is not a hair restorer, and it will ruin it instead of improving it. The dye will only stay on the hair a short time, and then the hair will become striped, and you will have to allow it to slowly change back to its natural color, which will take a long time, or resort to the dye again.

Dr. Brady's Health Talks INFANTILE PARALYSIS.

Acute anterior poliomyelitis, acute inflammation of the forward part of the spinal cord, or the lower part, should be called an infectious disease, rather than a nervous disease, but as it vents its effect chiefly upon the nervous system we include it in this series on the nerves, as we did St. Vitus's dance.

Whether the infection is carried by stable flies, by house flies, or by human carriers, is not yet known. There is no direct evidence that the disease is communicable, and it enters the body through the mucous membrane of the nose and mouth.

How It Begins. The child, perhaps in good health, has a feverish, restless night and next day seems out of sorts. There are perhaps indications of a "caching cold" (again the "catching cold" delusion works injury to the innocent) or else a slight sore throat. The child wakes one morning and complains of pain or inability to move a leg or both legs or an arm and leg, or both arms and legs.

In some cases the onset is more severe—higher fever, the first day, the child is propped up in bed, and in any case, there is no way of telling whether the trouble is serious until the weakness appears in the limbs. For that matter, no one can predict how any so-called "cold" or "sore throat" will terminate.

In some instances the onset of infantile paralysis is still more severe, the convulsions are frequent, and in the muscles becomes apparent in a few hours.

Subsequent Course. The pain disappears after a few days. From the time the muscles become progressively weaker for a week or two. Then the paralysis is permanent. In most cases the paralysis is permanent. This residual weakness. This residual paralysis, if not consistently managed, will result in a permanent paralysis of the limb. The use of a suitable brace at this time will prevent deformity.

Consistent application of electricity, daily massage by a trained masseur or by the mother under a masseur's supervision, and great rest, and general tonic treatment are part of the care of a case of poliomyelitis. After all has been done, the patient may be able to be restored to a fair use of the limb by means of electrical treatment.

Attendants of the patient must never forget that the secretions from nose and throat, at the same time, the bowels and kidneys should be thoroughly "disinfected" in the early or acute stage of the disease.

Questions and Answers. A. L. asks: Is there danger of taking cold after using a warm solution? B. is an only or watery solution more effective in the treatment of catarrh? C. How can electric give permanent relief for constipation? Reply: 1. No. 2. Depends on cause of catarrh. 3. No, not more than other treatments.

M. G. S. writes: I. Having had a stone removed from the kidney, should one drink boiled water only? 2. Is a triple stone water filter advisable? 3. Will it remove lime from the water? Reply: 1. Distilled water would be preferable. 2. Filters do not remove lime. 3. Lime in drinking water has nothing to do with the formation of stone in kidney. Drink plenty of water, especially alkaline mineral waters.

A. F. has a small sore pimple back of his ear, which resists treatment. He desires advice. The pimple has been there for some time. Doctor tells him it is not cancer. Reply: Have the doctor instigate his scalp around and under the pimple, and gently massage it. If it is a pimple, it will go away.

W. A. L. writes: You suggested a plaiting formula to form a permanent set some time ago. Where would one go for such an operation? Reply: Go to any general surgeon.

Mrs. M. J. writes: 1. My tongue is constantly coated, though I am well otherwise. 2. What is the cause of the gas in the bowels? 3. Should the bowels act more than once a day? Reply: 1. Insufficient present food and fruit in diet will keep tongue coated. 2. Gas is normally present in the bowel as a natural stimulant to peristaltic movement. 3. Some normal indigestion may be the cause of the evacuation daily; others have one every other day.

The Trey O'Hearts

Romantic Tale by Louis Joseph Vance. Copyright, 1914 by Louis Joseph Vance. SYNOPSIS. By arrangement with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, it is possible to read "The Trey O'Hearts" in pictures at the Regal Theatre. Synopsis of preceding chapters: The Trey O'Hearts is the death sign used by Seneca Trine in the private dramatic circumstances which have made him a woman of violence. Seneca Trine, son of the man whose name he has assumed, is innocent of the crime for which he is being held responsible for the accident which left Trine a helpless cripple for life. Alan Law, who is loved by Rose, Judith's twin and double, but in all other respects her opposite, is the man who saves Alan's life, but Alan saves her life under dramatic circumstances which have made her his wife. Thereafter Judith is arrested in turn by the old hatred, the new love, and jealousy of her father through and because of the aid she has extended to Alan in his fight with Rose from the vengeance which she has taken against the Western Arizona. Trine and his agents pursue them relentlessly.

CHAPTER XXVII.—THE SIGN AGAIN. He saw, clearly silhouetted against the glowing oblong of the window, the Mephistophelean profile of Seneca Trine, distorted with a grimace, the cruellest joy that ever hatred of man conceived. He saw Marrophat approach his master with a drunken swagger and a speech to which, though indistinguishable to the unseeing auditor, unquestionably afforded both of the other men ample excuse for ecstatic glances toward his conclusion. Mr. Marrophat appeared to see the peak of jubilation by fumbling in his coat pocket and bringing forth something which strongly resembled a single playing card.

Now when he had contrived to master his window, the cripple made a gesture which eloquently abolished this card, a gesture which said quite plainly: "I have finished." The thing has served its purpose. To her with it! Whereupon, with a smart jerk of his wrist, Mr. Marrophat sent the card spinning and sailing out through the open window to lose itself in the night.

The watcher didn't see it fall, and though he spent an unconscious and time searching for it in the deep dust of the roadway, he went his way in the end with curiosity unsated. Fate had reserved that card for a higher purpose.

Undisturbed, it lay where it had fallen, face upward, not a dozen feet from the front door of the Mountain House, until another day dawned on Mesquite. Then, in the clear light of that evening, four more strangers straggled into town—two weary and haggard men, two women and bedraggled women. One of these last was dressed in a suit of man's clothing, which the worse for wear. The other members of the party one and all wore the look of people who had escaped the jaws of death by the narrow margin of imagination. Their clothing, of the most rough-and-ready description though it was, had evidently at some quite recent time been sopping wet, then rough-dried on its wearers' backs, and was warped out of shape and caked with mud and dust. Even their hands and faces were none too clean; abortive efforts had evidently been made to erase some of the grime at a mountain spring, but lacking soap and towels the outcome had not been altogether happy.

At sight of the Mountain House the party betrayed slight symptoms of a more cheerful spirit, relaxing in the promise of food and drink and bed with which to sleep, the four quickened their steps.

But of a sudden one of the women—she who wore the garments of a sex-paused, uttered low groans—thrust with terror, and clutching the arm of the man nearest her, pointed down to the card that stared up from the dust at her feet.

"It was a Trey of Hearts." "Oh, what can it mean?" Rose whispered brokenly, clinging to her lover's arm. "Surely you don't think... Surely it can't mean... I'm afraid it does." Alan Law responded gravely, eying the front of the Mountain House. "Our luck holds consistently—that's all. It wouldn't be so if we didn't pick out the one place where Marrophat and Jimmy chose to stop over night. Fortunately, it's early; I doubt they're up. With half a day we ought to be able to find some way of putting a good distance between us and this town before they waken... Tom!"

But Mr. Marcus was already at his elbow, in a thorough sympathy of Alan's interpretation of the sign or omen, he had attached to the card that trembled in Rose's hand. "Sharp's the word!" he agreed. "And there's a motor car over there, in front of the blacksmith's. Probably we can hire her—"

"Trine's car!" Alan ejaculated, swinging round and recognizing the automobile at a glance. "Then he's here, as well!" "Looks like it," Marcus admitted. "But so much the better. We'll just naturally take the darn thing off his hands, and I'll bet a dollar there isn't another car within a radius of fifty miles that'll be well out of these giddy mountains long before he finds anything to chafe us with."
