"I do—very, very much."

"Then, if you regret it very, very much, I'll forgive you this time," he laughed, seating himself and taking her hand.

She took her hand away quickly and jumped to her feet in indignation.

"How can thee jest at such a moment?" she cried.

He rose and followed her. "I shouldn't have jested," he said.

Lucy turned and looked at him with a pathetic seriousness in her eyes.

"Until this morning, Harry," she said, "I wanted to be a city girl. I thought the little town where I have lived was a pitiful place."

"But it had you in it," Harry reminded her, gently.

"I am beginning to understand," Lucy said, "that here appearances are everything—but there isn't any anything in the country, there is everything—and that takes the delect from the appearances."

"Why, you're a genuine little philosopher," Harry said.

"We have the blue sky in the daytime back there," Lucy continued, "and here there have clouds and smoke. There we have the stars at night, here there have electric signs. There we get up at sunrise and the little birds sing us a welcome from the trees, but here—"

"Here the folks stay up until sunrise and eat the little birds before that," Harry finished for her. "You don't want a city home, then, Lucy?"

"I want a home where the heart does not have to be hidden," she told him.

"And so do I. I want a real home, with the best little girl in the world as my wife."

There was no mistaking his meaning. Lucy looked at him for half a minute, then said:

"When thee have explained, Harry."

CHAPTER XI.

Fifteen minutes later Count von Fits cautiously crept beneath the window and whistled. Mrs. Blazes did not answer. He whistled louder. Still no answer.

"If you are gone, I'm glad," he said. "Cheer me by not replying."

But no such cheer was in store for him. Mrs. Blazes noiselessly opened the window and whispered:

"Sh! Be careful! Did you get my hat?"

"Not yet," the Count told her. "Dey haff to make him. I wouldn't trust dot Daffie woman. I vent to anudder hat place. Der name is Tereese."

"But they won't know the model," Mrs. Blazes feared.

"I eggplain him perfectly. I tell her a shape like a smashed balloon, yellow on der outside mit a garden of red puppies."

"Red puppies, you silly man!"

"Puppies or popples—dey look chust as bad to me from now on."

"You'd best get right back and stay there until it is finished," Mrs. Blazes suggested.

"No. I told dem to sent it here, so I make sure I get it."

"That's good," she said, with a tone of relief.

"Now you come right out and vander hat comes I giff it to you, and away you go."

"Come out!" she asked sarcastically. "Am I an aeroplane?"

"Lissen. Make a rope yet, and I pull you out."

"An idea!" she exclaimed with delight. "I'll tear up the sheets and things in here, tie them together in a rope, and let myself down."

"Splendid! I go and vatch for der messenger mit der hat."

The Count strolled away, while she closed her window.

A young couple came walking slowly through the flower garden. It was Pigeon and Carolyn. The twilight spell had been cast upon them. Arm in arm, silently they strolled until they neared the bench.

Suddenly Pigeon said:

"Let's sit down here. I've got to see Harry through his racket, you know"—evidently continuing a conversation which had lapsed some moments before—"but after that—"

He looked down into Carolyn's eyes. "After that?" she asked, softly.

For Carolyn had all a woman's intuition, in spite of her young years, and she diagnosed the symptoms of an approaching proposal. She did not intend to accept him, but no woman will allow a proposal to get away from her. Proposals to a woman are as the scalps the Indian brave ties to his war belt.

"After that," said Pigeon, beginning to sit down. "I can look after my own affairs. And I—"

An ominous, ripping sound came. Mrs. Blazes was beginning to make her rope, but the young couple, of course, knew nothing of that. Pigeon straightened up with a jerk and tried to look unconcerned. He did not know what had gone away. Carolyn tried to smooth over his embarrassment by saying:

"Isn't it a lovely evening?"

Then she began to sink gracefully upon the seat, when an even more ominous ripping sound was heard. Carolyn abandoned her project with due and proper suddenness, while Pigeon mopped his brow, and said, in flustered tones that he tried to make sound matter-of-course:

"I thought earlier today that we might have some rain."

He lifted his foot to rest it carelessly upon the bench, not caring to try to sit down any more, but with the movement came a terrific rip as though something had torn loose forever.

He dropped his foot and tried to whistle a popular air. Carolyn looked the other way and became nervous.

"I can't do a thing with my hair tonight," she observed, lifting her arms to pat it into shape.

R-r-rip! Her arms dropped to her sides, soldierwise.

"I think," Pigeon said, desperately, "that the evening is the most pleasant time of the day."

He sat down, in spite of the ripping that still sounded.

"Won't you be seated?" he asked politely. (To Be Continued.)

AUTOMOBILE LAWS

by the driver of a horse; to fail to pass on the right; to approach a vehicle from the rear without giving warning or to pass at a speed greater than ten miles an hour; and to drive at a speed exceeding twenty-five miles an hour in the country, fifteen miles in cities and villages and ten miles in business districts;—to do any of these things is to violate the law.

The recent remarkable growth in the automobile sales in Gratiot county and the consequent increase in the number of machines used has rendered necessary a strict observance of the laws. While the majority of owners obey the regulations and cause no trouble whatever, a few either recklessly careless or afflicted with the speed mania, have made it imperative that the proper authorities enforce the rules strictly before loss of life is caused. One of the most noticeable violations is running at night without lights. Every evening a great many machines go about the city and along the roads outside with no lights whatever. Another serious violation is the approaching vehicles without warning and speeding by.

As uniformly as the law concerning this is disregarded, it is a wonder that many more accidents than have occurred have not resulted. Shooting around corners in the city at high speed without caution and exceeding the speed limits generally are further frequent violations.

The city marshal has determined that all disregard for the automobile laws must cease and that arrests and vigorous prosecutions will be the order of the land in the future in cases of violations. This is a move in the right direction and the marshal will receive the support of the entire community in the enforcement of the regulations. The misdemeanors are confined to comparatively few autoists and in the interests of the large majority of automobilists as well as for the protection of the lives and property of the masses there must be a strict observance of the statutes.

JURY DISAGREES

In Case of People vs. Chris B. Tuger of St. Louis—No Decision Given

In the case, People vs. Chris. B. Tuger, of St. Louis, tried in Justice Chadwick's court Tuesday, the jury was unable to reach a decision and turned in a report that they could not agree.

According to the evidence presented, Chris. B. Tuger was driving the car of Mr. Letts, an insurance agent of Orosco, on a road north of town at a terrific speed when he met Ed. Ruckman and Chas. Johnson, both of Pine River township in a buggy. Mr. Ruckman raised his hands as a signal for the driver of the machine to stop but he paid no attention to it and dashed on past the buggy. The horse ran away overturning the rig into the ditch. The complaining witness, Mr. Ruckman and Mr. Johnson both swore that the signal was given, and Joshua Davidson, of Alma who happened to be walking along the road at the time corroborated their evidence. Ray Best, who lives on the road on which the accident happened, said that when the automobile passed his house it must have been going at a speed of from thirty to thirty-five miles per hour. The defendant, Mr. Tuger, and his employer, Mr. Letts, were both in court.

Chas. H. Goggin, prosecuting attorney, represented the people and Chas. H. Giddings, of St. Louis, the defendant.

The jury was composed of John Schwartz, foreman, and Simon Messingquilt, J. A. Baker, and C. Benedict of Alma; Arthur Murphy of Summer township and S. E. Naffziger of Arcada township. They were out about an hour. The case will be tried again in Justice Chadwick's court the 30th of this month.
