IF YOU SHOULD EVER GET MARRIED.

If you should ever get married, John, I'll tell you what to do-Go get a little tenement, Just big enough for two! And one spare room for company, And one spare bed within it -And if you'd begin love's life aright, You'd better thus begin it.

In furniture be moderate, John, And let the stuffed chairs wait; One looking-glass will do for both Yourself and loving mate; And Brussells, too, and other things, Which make a fine appearance, If you can better afford it, they Will look better a year hence.

Some think they must have pictures, John, Superb and costly, too; Your wife will be a picture, John, Let that suffice for you. Remember how the wise man said, A tent and love within it, Is better than a splendid house, With bickerings every minute.

And one word as to cooking, John-Your wife can do that best; For love, to make the biscuit rise, Is better far than yeast. No matter if each day you don't Bring turkey to your table-

Twill better relish by-and-by,

When you are better able.

For all you buy, pay money, John-Money that very day; If you would have your life run smooth, There is no better way. A note to pay is an ugly thing-

If thing you choose to call it: When it hangs o'er a man who has No money in his wallet. And now, when you are married John, Don't try to ape the rich; It took them many a toilsome year

To gain their envied niche. And if you should gain the summit, John, Look well to your beginning: And then will all you win repay The toil and care of winning. Hospitality.—Bayard Taylor thinks

"man is naturally an hospitable animal," and describes the difference between the natures of the English, French, and German:

You arrive in England a stranger, and present a letter of introduction to some gentleman. His reception strikes you as cold and formal; he makes no special offers of assistance, and you are inclined to suspect his acquaintance will be of little service. By and by, however, you find that he has been siyou have carelessly uttered, and procured you opportunities for realizing them; the want of demonstration has been more than compensated by solid ser-

In Paris you find just the reverse. Nothing can surpass the empressment with which you are received. Everything is at your disposal; you will make the man happy by the freest use of his time and trouble. Nevertheless, you most beware of taking these offers literally, unless you are prepared for dissappointment. The outshow of benevolence has exhausted the capacity for action. A few elegant cards are FAYETTEVILLE STREET, RALEIGH, N. C. exchanged, and there the matter rests.

In Germany we have the medium between the two extremes-a general, cordial manner, moderate proffers of service, and conscientious performance thereof, whenever it is needed .- Acts of kindness between strangers are more common than in almost any civilized country. I once stopped for a night in a country inn in a remote part of Bavaria. The delegate to the Legislative Chamber in Munich had just been elect ed by the people of the district, and they gave him a farewell banquet that evening. In the mids of the solemnities I was politely invited to attend; are authorised to contract for advertising in ou paper. President; the principal personages present were described and then introduced, and before the meeting closed, I received an invitation to spend a few days at a neighboring castle. Yet I was convinced that not one of the assembly had any knowledge of me, further than that I was an American trayeller, as we will good han been all lies than ball cut - 10., Proper

There is a custom in Spain which always seemed to me to be the perfection of hospitality. A Spaniard, for instance, J. W. HOLDEN. on entering a cafe where he is accus tomed to take his refreshments, will notice a stranger present-possibly a Authorized publishers of the Laws of the United foreign traveller. Calling one of the waiters to him, he quietly pays the stranger's bill, takes his own ice or chocolate, and goes away, without ever having spoken to the man whom he has so surreptitiously entertained. When the unconscious stranger calls for his bill he is astonished to find that he owes nothing. In traveling by diligence from Mexico to Vera Cruz, I found it imposible to pay for meals at the hotels on the road; some one of my fellow passengers had always done it in advance. One of them, a Portuguese gentleman, afterwards visited me in New York, bringing with him a quantity of the choicest Havana cigars as a present. If ever I visit the banks of the Tagus, I hope to find him still

In the remote parts of Sweden and Norway, where there are no accommo 1 dations for travelers, the clergymen are always expected to entertain them. This is sometimes a heavy tax upon some members of that ill paid class, but it is cheerfully endured from a sense of duty. Few houses, indeed, are closed against the stranger, and the poorest host oftentimes declines to take payment. I often made a journey through France, under circumstances which No paper in the South has advertising facilities | compelled me to lodge in the humblest cabarets; and although a few sous were required for food and lodging, yet honesty, the simple kindness of the peasants, the little attentions they are so careful to pay and so delicate in paying, were grateful examples of the hospitable spirit.

I half suspect that "the rude Carinthian boor," who

Against the houseless stranger shuts the door, existed only in Goldsmith's imagination, or that he generalized from a single unpleasant personal experience. (A habit, by the by, to which most men are addicted.) The Carinthians are rude, certainly, but no branch of the Sclavonic race is inhospitable, In the stagnation of China, the milk of human kindness has grown somewhat stale, yet even there a certain form of hospitality is kept up, however the spirit may be lacking.

A HORRIBLE CANNIBAL STORY .- A horrible tragedy is reported from the island of Fiji, South Seas. The Rev. Thomas Baker, with an assistant missionary and six native teachers, went to vist some inland tribes, and he and his party were brutally murdered by one of the tribes, who are described as the must confirmed cannibals. The writer says: "In this town (Longtown) there lives a notorious cannibal, with whom I had a little conversation. He pointed me to a pile of human bones in the fork of an orange tree under which we were sitting, and assured me that he had eaten the men of which each bone there was a representative, and that he had kept these bones as a memento of his cannibalism. Many other things did this inhuman wretch make known to me, and his countenance, and more than ordinarily worn teeth, only helped to convince me that he had literally been a bone-crusher! To have listened to this man's statements-and told, too, in the presence of those who could have contradicted them if false-would have removed forever from the minds of some the idea that Fijians are not | yield the holder about one per cent. more interlovers of human flesh. This , vile can- est per annum. Circulars with full particulars nibal confirmed that, as for eating, | furnished upon application. nothing was comparable to human flesh, not even fowls or pork."
