Tuesday afternoon, 3 o'clock.

The Convention met according to adjournment.

Gen. Allison, on behalf of the Committee of twenty-six, presented the following Report and Resolutions:

The frequent recurrence to fundamental principles of Government is essential not only to the duration of our Institutions, but to the preservation of liberty. One of these great principles, is, that a careful examination of the acts of agents who are entrusted with the affairs of the people is always useful and proper. We, a portion of the people of the State of North Carolina, have examined the principles and actions of those who conduct the present administration of our affairs and we feel much dissatisfaction when we view the open and unblushing violation of every principle and pledge by which they were elevated into power and place. We read in the Inaugural address of Gen. Harrison on taking the reins of power intrusted to him by the American people, that "it was the remark of a Roman Consul in an early period of that celebrated republic, that a most striking contrast was observable in the conduct of candidates for offices of power and trust before and after obtaining them—they seldom carrying out in the latter case, the pledges and promises made in the former."

We were led to believe that, with this most instructive page of history before him, we would profit by its useful lessons; and that some of the numerous pledges and profuse promises which deluded a confiding and generous people, would certainly be realized.—The people were promised that in the economical habits, and patriarchal simplicity of an inmate of a log cabin, they would see the days of republican utility and rigid economy. Look at the expenditure of $8000 in one brief month, for furniture to be added to that which, if the Whigs were believed, already rivalled the extravagance and luxury of European monarchy. Was this a violation of the pledge? or was the promise only made to the ear, "to be broken to the hope?"

Was the outlay of more than $3000 at the burial of the President for silk gloves, mourning scarfs, and whips and carriage hire, in strict conformity to the promise of economy and reform? Was the calling of an extra session of Congress at an enormous expense of our money, whose deliberations all ended in debates and extravagance, in faithful keeping with this promise? Was the donation of $25000 to Mrs. Harrison whose circumstances were by no means needy, a part and parcel of Whig economy? We were asked to the feast, and such are the articles that are set before us, and with deep disappointment the people feel that "such is not the entertainment to which they were invited."

On the entrance of the present administration we were told that new books were opened in the Treasury, that the enormous expenses of former extravagance might be settled, and a new era in Government created. The largest outlays of Mr. Van Buren's administration never came up to thirty-two millions, which President Tyler states in his annual message is the present expenses; and while the expenses of the Government exceed its revenue so far, that the doors of Congress are beset at this moment with the earnest supplications of the Secretary of the Treasury for money to carry on the expenses of the Government. We ask the good people of every party, to consider this lamentable state of affairs; and in a spirit of perfect candor inquire if there is not something wrong which demands their scrutiny? With a country as beautiful and bounteous as any that the smile of Heaven ever blessed—with a nation of freemen as its inhabitants—at a period of profound quiet—when neither war nor famine have desolated the one or destroyed the energies of the other, we find the resources of the country cannot be made by its rulers to yield a revenue sufficient for its expenses. A kind Heaven gives us the country, but designing men have given us rulers.

When these things press upon the honest yeomanry of our country, who in all ages and in all countries suffer deeper, and longer, and more intolably than any other class, they feel how woefully they have been betrayed, and how deep and dark have been the sins perpetrated against them. One year has not yet rolled around since Federal men and measures were in power, and the nation has already suffered enough misery for an age.—If their early spring bear show blossoms, what will be the fruit? When the deceived people, in States where the elections have occurred, have denuded of these Rulers the summing of this account, and called on these faithless stewards for an account of their stewardship, how have they answered, and how have their answers been received? They reply, the act of God took from us our President; thus taking impious shelter under the dispensation of providence for their own broken promises, and faithless deeds. Although Gen. Harrison is dead, is his party dead? is Whiggery dead? or has the majority of Congress lost its power? The people from Michigan to Georgia have answered with the withering rebuke of thousands and tens of thousands majorities against them. Another excuse that these faithless agents give the people is that the President that now is, has deceived them. If he had, it would only be paying them in their own coin. But this is untrue; for Mr. Tyler has only used his veto on a U. S. Bank, and that in conformity with the views long established and openly avowed. But admit he had not vetoed the Bank, would that have relieved the people? The people know that this would be no relief from the hardness of the times or the misuse of wicked and designing men. The mass of corruption that has been developed by an exposure of a Bank, once so much the idol of the Whigs, that its President, Mr. Biddle, was without any parallel, has offended the senses of every honest man, Whig or Democrat; and the grand jury of the country in which he resides have coupled his name with that of the abandoned swindler. In looking back on the
