Women of Influence. We are, all of us, whether young or old, famous or obscure, women of influence. We cannot live a day without affecting the world somewhat for good or ill, whether we will or no. We are all a part of life's forces, whether we know it or not. Be as humble as you like, you are still a person of influence, if not by your own choosing, then often by God's decree. It may be only a smile or a simple kindness that you have given to a little child, but it starts agencies you little dream of; or it may be some selfishness and lack of honor, some weakness in you that sets in motion a long train of hurtful and sad influences or circumstances. For all life is connected, and whether you wish it or not your life affects other lives.—Woman's Home Companion.

Testing His Love. "Pshaw," said the pretty brunette, "it's the easiest thing in the world to find out whether a man loves you!" "What is your method?" asked the stately blond. "Make him spend his last dollar on you, and if he seems to enjoy it you may be sure that he really cares for you."—Chicago Record-Herald.

When Reynolds Signed. Reynolds hardly ever signed his work. But upon the completion of the portrait of Mrs. Siddons as "The Tragic Muse" he wrote his name large on the gold embroidery of her dress. He was unable, he said, "to resist the temptation of sending my name to posterity on the hem of your garment."

FACTS ABOUT BABIES. Some That Surprised and One That Pleased the Professor. "I never knew before I had one," said the professor of physics to his bachelor assistant, "just how closely your science could be applied to a baby. I have been astounded at the following true conclusions:

"As two similar bodies vary in weight as the cubes of their dimensions, I find that a baby two feet long about weighs just about one-sixteenth of a man five feet high; also that, as the surfaces of two similar bodies vary as the squares of their dimensions, a baby as before would have about one-sixth the surface of the man. So the extent of surface proportional to weight in the baby is vastly greater than in the adult. In fact, a square foot of the baby's skin would shield just one-third the substance of what a square foot would on an adult.

"Arguing from this and knowing that the rate of cooling of a solid depends on the extent of surface, I found that a baby got cold quicker or warmed quicker when exposed to a fire than a man; also, as any living body is higher in temperature than the surrounding air and has to lose heat continually—the rate of loss depending on the surface—it is readily seen that a baby, in order to keep up normal temperature, has to furnish more heat in proportion to its weight than man, and therefore has to eat more in proportion to its weight than man. To prove that a baby gives out an enormous amount of heat, keep the heat from escaping by wrapping a heavy blanket around it. In a half an hour the temperature under the cover will be almost unbearable to the hand, and the baby will be found covered with sweat.

"The same knotty problem comes up when the baby is bathed. You know yourself how cool you feel when you bathe in a cold room in warm water, but in very little of it, so that most of your wet body is out of the water on account of the heat of your body being taken to evaporate the water? The baby suffers much worse on account of that same big proportion of surface.

"But I find one encouraging thing in this peculiar geometrical problem of the human form, I find that if a dress is made for my little daughter two feet high and one for her mother five feet high, it takes only one-sixth the cloth to do it, although the dresses were made in exactly the same style."

—Lawrence Hodges in Chicago Record-Herald.

Pleasing People. Men often say by way of defense that it is impossible to please everybody. It is worse than that. It is impossible to please anybody.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Love and the Men. Kitty—They say, you know, that love makes the world go round. Marie—Maybe so, but it cannot make the eligible young men go round.—Boston Transcript.

Mad Audience. Ham—Gee, but our audience was mad last night! Let—Sore, eh? Ham—Now, we played at the insane asylum.—Stanford Chapparel.

The Seven Wise Men. The names and characteristic aphorisms of the seven wise men of ancient Greece are as follows: Solon of Athens, "Nothing in excess"; Thales of Miletus, "Suretyship brings ruin"; Pittacus of Mitylene, "Know thine opportunity"; Bias of Priene in Caria, "The many workers spoil the work"; Chilon of Sparta, "Know thyself"; Cleobolus of Rhodes, "Moderation is the chief good"; and Pericles of Corinth, "Forethought in all things."

Father's Reason. Young Harold was late in attendance for Sunday school, and the minister inquired the cause. "I was going fishing, but father wouldn't let me," announced the lad. "That's the right kind of a father to have," replied the reverend gentleman. "Did he explain the reason why he would not let you go?" "Yes, sir. He said there wasn't bait enough for two."—Harper's Magazine.

A Duty Well Done. The teacher had been giving a long lecture to the juvenile class on the subject of morals. "Now, Harry," she said, "what is one duty toward our neighbors?" "To keep an eye on 'em," was the reply.—Exchange.
