HARVEST CELEBRATIONS OF THE SALVATION ARMY
Capt. and Mrs. Box and members of the local corps of the Salvation Army have been working energetically during the last few weeks in order to make their annual Harvest Festival Celebrations surpass in every feature those of previous years. Friday and Saturday, October first and second, at 8:00 p. m., are the dates set apart for these services, which will certainly be of an interesting character. The Hall on Main street will be profusely decorated with garlands, ferns and flowers, and through the generosity of many of the business men of the city a large display of merchandise will adorn the platform. These goods will be sold by auction in both meetings, the proceeds to be devoted towards meeting the heavier expenses during the winter months and also the many charitable demands made upon the corps during that time of the year. In addition to the sale and display the meeting will be interspersed with vocal and instrumental music of a bright and interesting nature. The public are cordially invited to attend these special Harvest Celebrations.

ALL STATE SCHOOLS ARE NOW IN SESSION

Minot Normal the Last of State Institutions to Resume Work

Secretary Charles Brewer of the State Board of Regents announced yesterday that all the state institutions had resumed their fall sessions. The Minot Normal was the last of the state schools to start work, but sessions were resumed there yesterday. Heavy enrollments are reported from all of the schools. The greatest increase so far reported is at the School of Forestry, where the enrollment is practically double what it was last year. It is too early, however, to get accurate figures, on the total enrollment in the various schools. Several changes of minor importance have been made in the faculties of the various schools by the State Board of Regents.

QUARTERLY JOURNAL VERY INTERESTING

The Quarterly Journal of the University of North Dakota for October contains several very inviting and instructive articles. The first of these is an article upon "Educational Perspectives" by Joseph Kennedy, dean of the School of Education of the University. Dean Kennedy treats the subject historically and after a candid and judicial review of the whole field tries to show a logical and satisfactory method of combining the apparently contradictory vocational and cultural aims of education. Wallace N. Stearns, professor of religious education in Fargo college, contributes an article upon "The Synoptic Problem" dealing with the peculiarities and coincidences of the synoptic gospels. Browning's "The Ring and the Book" receives elucidation by Prof. Vernon Purinton Squires, professor of the English language and literature in the University of North Dakota. Prof. Squires outlines the story and makes the reader long to become familiar with the poem itself. Prof. Henry R. Brush, professor of romance, languages and literature in the State university, writes upon "The Place of Composition in Modern Language Teaching." The article is one of interest to teachers of English composition and treats intelligently and understandingly of the problems which such a teacher has to face in his work. Prof. S. F. Halfyard discusses "The Evolution of the Idea of God," beginning with the lowest pagans and tracing the development of the idea on up to its highest forms in the spirituality and universality in the thought of Jesus and St. Paul. "State-wide Use of the University Library" is discussed by Clarence Wesley Sumner, the university librarian. An explanatory map accompanies the article. Several interesting book reviews and the University Notes complete a very attractive and informing issue of the Quarterly.

SPECIAL FEATURE PICTURE FRIDAY

Cyrus Townsend Brady's "Island of Regeneration" At Bismarck

"The Island of Regeneration" is a six-part adaption of Cyrus Townsend Brady's novel of the same name, produced under the direction of Harry Davenport, is the week's feature on the Vitagraph Theatre bill. In its entirety, "The Island of Regeneration" is an exceptionally satisfying production, as a human interest drama and as an artistic photoplay in the matter of physical environment. Edith Storey is just the actress to portray the varied life of Katherine Brenton, first the apostle of advanced ideas that leave no room for humdrum marriage, next the scantily clad companion of a savage on a desert island, and last of all an orthodox woman ready to become a law-abiding wife. Miss Storey does a number of things exceedingly well during the years on the island when her character is under going the rejuvenating influence of primitive life. She swims much nature intended, without the hairpinning skirts of a modern bathing suit, likewise she poses gracefully on a rock—merely incidents, to be sure, but an audience will remember them. It should not be inferred, however, that there is anything unduly startling in the picture, for, on the contrary, its tone is perfectly healthful. Katherine is a far better woman for her experience on the island, and she is the means of regenerating a man, born in civilization, developed as a savage and drawn back among his own people—because of Katherine. It is a picture marked by carefully staged scenes introducing plenty of exciting action. The "Nansmond" is burned at sea and Charnock's wife and son reach a desert island in a lifeboat. The woman dies and John grows to manhood, speechless and totally ignorant. Twenty years after the destruction of the "Nansmond," the second thread of the plot is introduced, with an exposition of the character of Katherine, who has advanced notions before the society folk of San Francisco and finally, Langford, seemingly a kindred spirit, persuades her to test her unconventional theories by accompanying him on a cruise.

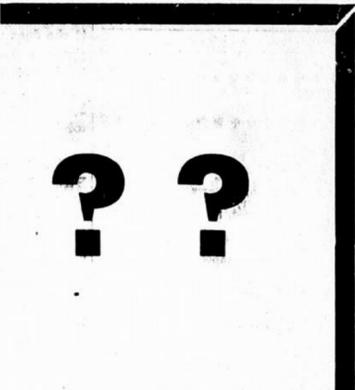

When they are well out in the Pacific ocean, Langford reveals the brutality of his nature, and after a vicious fight in which much of the cabin furniture is smashed, Katherine lowers a launch and sets out for nowhere. Washed onto the shore of the lone island, she becomes the companion of its one inhabitant, and they have three undisturbed years in which to become thoroughly acquainted. Then Langford, repentant, returns to find her and informs John, whom Katherine has taught to talk and think, that the woman belongs to him because of the two weeks spent together on the yacht. Katherine, completely in love with her island maid, hides in a secret cave and he thinks her dead. Langford finds her but she refuses to leave the island until John credits her innocence and comes back to get her.

An earthquake is the most memorable of the many excellent scenes arranged by Director Davenport. The acting of Miss Storey is ably supported by Antonio Moreno as the islander, and S. Rankin Drew as Langford in the prologue sincere performances are given by Leo Lelaney and Naomi Childers as Charnock and his wife. Bismarck and Grand theatres one night only—Friday, Oct. 1st.

200-pounder that the Aggie boosters had pinned their faith to, as one of the mainstays of the squad.

Coach Davis has been giving his men light signal work for the past two nights and with the coming week some scrimmage work will be indulged in. As yet, there has not been enough men out to make up two teams, but with the beginning of the coming week it is hoped that about 30 men will be out for the game. Some of the old men are yet to turn up and some of the new fellows have been busy getting their work lined up and so have been unable to get out. The announcement made by the athletic management early in the season, that season tickets were to be sold to the downtown fans has caused quite a stir among the Aggie boosters and already several inquiries have been made to the management.

SHOULD A MOTHER TELL?
"Should a Mother Tell?" Though her heart be racked,
And her soul cries out, with its burden fell,
Should she speak when the hazard to kill or save
Rests on her word? "Be Silent or Tell?"

Should she bleed for the secret her blind love guards,
As a miser glazes o'er his cankered gold,
Should she wake in the night with a tortured cry:
"God, forgive me, should I have told?"

In the dawn's bright sun looms the guillotine,
Black as fate 'gainst the lightning sky,
Red as blood gleams the fateful knife,
Should her fast-sealed lips let a loved one die?

What of the days that are still unrolled,
Each bitter hour with its brooding hell,
Nobler to speak or to hide her shame,
Always the question "Should She Tell?"
At the Grand and Bismarck Theatres today only.

TWO WOMEN SAVE LIVES OF FOUR

Harvey, N. D., Sept. 28.—Mrs. Anton Billigmeier and three children, pinned under an automobile when it backed down a steep hill and over the side of a high grade, escaped severe injury only by reason of the fact that the windshield served to hold the car from them long enough to permit a rescue. Mrs. J. Cozer and Mrs. Fred Schroeder, who leaped to safety, effected the rescue by lifting one side of the machine. All were bruised and scratched but were not seriously hurt.

FOUR RELATIVES IN BIG CONFLICT

Langdon, N. D., Sept. 27.—Robt. Murie of Harvey township, received a letter from the old home in Edinburgh, Scotland, that brought the realities of the great war in Europe. Another nephew has been stationed at Port Said since July, and still another is doing active service in France. Mr. Murie's youngest brother is in the south of England, and expects a call to France at any time.
