Reversion to Type.
An English traveler in Baluchistan had from a holy man in that country a story about Moses, which does not appear in the Scriptures, yet which has its pertinence to this matter of politicians proposing to do away with all the evils of the human lot.
The patriarch was sitting in his house very sad, and the Lord said to him: "Prophet Moses, why art thou cast down?"
"Alas!" said he, "I see so many people sorrowful. Some are unclothed, and some are hungry. I pray thee make all happy and contented."
The Lord promised it should be so. But soon Moses was again disconsolate, and once more the Lord asked the cause.
"Lord," cried the prophet, "the up per story of my house has fallen down, and nobody will come to mend it; they are all too busy enjoying themselves."
"But what am I to do?"
"Lord, make the people as they were before!"

Joffre of Peasant Blood.
No definite information is available as to the ancestors of General Joffre. In an account he is described as descended from the hard-headed "rough and ready" race of Catalan peasants who have lived for ages along the Mediterranean hinterland on both the French and Spanish sides of the mountains. It is supposed that he has some trace of Spanish blood in his veins, while he is said to speak the Catalan dialect quite fluently.
