BY BETTY BROWN.

These two sketches were made to please the capricious taste of an October bride, but there is no reason why you and I and others who sometimes wear housefrocks should not slant an eye upon them, and mayhap copy the pretty things. The model at the left is simplicity itself and though the original is made in Georgette crepe in pale blue with border of oriental embroidery, the frock would be pretty enough in voile, challie, poplin or some delicately colored wash fabric. It is made all in a piece, with the full skirt gathered into a saucy frill marking a high waistline. The lounging robe at the right is in buff color crepe de chine trimmed with old blue embroidery. The coat is cut in points, each point tabbed with a blue tassel. The ribbon at the bust line is also blue. Any of the pretty wash materials, especially voile, would make up prettily in this style.
