LETTING GEORG DO IT.

If cablegrams are to be relied upon, it ought to be easy for Georg Michalis to slide into his job as German chancellor. All that the reichstag is going to ask him to pledge himself to is this: Peace without annexations and indemnities; freedom of the seas; no economic blockade after the war; no carrying of the hatred of war into peace.

All of these things have got beyond Germany's control, as Georg knows, for he is at all posted, and agreeing to them is about like merely agreeing to draw his pay. The German people may seriously desire peace. Their terms will have to be something much less than restoration of the ante-bellum conditions.

"Let Georg do it," said Holloway. Will he, though?

SOUNDS FOREIGN LIKE.

Today weary mothers carrying babies, with older children trudging along in the dust, lined almost every road out of town. They were going to join their husbands, who were driven out yesterday and the day before, but many of them did not know just where to go. Trains were boarded at every town in the district by entire families of refugees, each adult carrying a bundle wrapped in a sheet, a pack of bedding or an old valise. Many refugees destitute of the necessities of life are camped in the woods.

The foregoing reads like a report from Armenia, or Galicia, or Rumania, but it isn't. It's from the loud producing regions of Missouri, U. S. A. There's an "industrial disturbance" over there.

Peace hath its horrors not less than war.

Ludendorff to become Germany's military dictator? Another pseudonym for the kaiser.

DID CROWN PRINCE WIN?

A haze surrounds Germany. The censorship bars real news. But a few highly significant facts seem well authenticated. There was undoubtedly a move by the Catholic centrist party and the socialists to force a program of peace without annexations and without indemnities. There was also a well-nigh unanimous demand for universal manhood suffrage in highly gerrymandered Prussia. There were probably threats that the otherwise dominant reichstag block would refuse war credits.

The kaiser came to Berlin in hot haste. He summoned Hindenburg, the popular idol, and Ludendorff, the brains of the military autocracy; then, as the demands would affect Germany for all time, the crown prince.

The military machine does not want reform and it very much desires peace, accompanied by annexations and huge indemnities. The landed Prussian aristocracy agrees.

And the crown prince is their principal spokesman. As heir to the throne, he opposed his father's apparent unwillingness to yield. He lined up with the reactionaries and demanded the head of Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg. He won all along the line.

The chancellor was dismissed and a comparative nonentity was named, who can be depended upon to be a more figurehead. Reform goes by the board. Germany proclaims its purpose to fight on for a victory the Allies will have to pay for, both with lands and money.

This should stiffen their iron determination to push this war through to the crushing of the German ruling class. The present kaiser, evil in influence, besotted with the divine right mania, is at least a man of brains and ability. The crown prince seems to have neither.

He seems for years to have set himself in opposition to his imperial father—as all Hohenzollern heirs do. He glorified in the wretched Zabern affair, where the military cruelly set upon the civilian population of that Alsatian town. He applauded attacks upon Bethmann-Hollweg. He has made himself part and parcel of the allied military caste.

Hundreds of thousands of German soldiers have been sacrificed to his vain desire to appear in history as the conqueror of Verdun. If he is in the ascendant now, it means a fool and a fool has practically taken precedence over a father with brains. It means a graver repudiation to the Allies, now and hereafter. It means this war must not end until Germany is beaten to her knees.

If the senate finishes anything within a month of the time it ought to be finished, the nation may consider itself lucky.

One disadvantage of the newly invented airplane that goes straight up may be that when it falls it will fall straight down.

Maybe Wilhelm has got to the point where he can't fool all the German people all the time. When any fellow reaches this point, his job sure becomes a ticklish one.

Saturday Evening Letter By Justice J. E. Robinson

Full many a gem of purest ray serene, The dark, unfathomed caves of ocean bear, Full many a flower is born to bud unseen, And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

I regret the editors of some big dailies do not like me and do not care to aid the cause of judicial reform by publishing my weekly letters. I think it is the first time that ever a supreme court judge has undertaken to give the press and the people weekly letters in regard to the public service. Our supreme court judges have been kept in utter darkness, and, of course, they have had poor service, and so it must ever be until the press and the people show some special interest in public affairs and in the duties of their public servants. Without any supervision or control, accounting or reporting, it is folly to look for good service; of course, a letter must not be a mere report. It must be readable, or it will not be read.

This week we charged one judge with the absence of full days and now hope the week will make up for a month of last time. As we read some few weeks ago the United States supreme court adjourned for three months with 530 cases undecided. Of course that is not good business and it is a fearful moral wrong. It is an unpardonable sin. When judges quit their work and steal the time for which they are well paid they put themselves on a level with other stealers. Time is money. To steal time for which a judge is paid, a good part of money is lost and the judge who does it cannot be regarded as a truly honest man. He should be impeached and removed from office. There is no sense or reason for the judges of any supreme court being one, two or three years, or even six months or three months, behind their work. If the judges are not competent to do the work and to decide every case within three months, they should have manhood and decency enough to resign and quit their jobs.

In all supreme courts there are what are known as the laws delays. These are due mainly to the lack of business methods, the writing of long-winded decisions and the toleration of frivolous appeals and motions. In our supreme court the writing of long-winded decisions is a grievous cause of delay. With a mass of impending business a judge sits down and passes a week in writing a decision of two dozen or more pages on some small, kindergarten matter. He quotes pleadings and documents and quotations from other decisions all around the country. He discusses points and matters in no way necessary to a correct and lucid decision of the case. Such a decision is never published in the newspapers and it is never read, unless by a few attorneys who have not much to do. It never convinces the defeated party and the other party needs no convincing. Hence, it serves no useful purposes. You remember the suit to oust the state board of regents. Within three days after it was argued my short decision of three pages was written and given to the press. As it was brief, and was based on the constitution, a copy was sent to the press. It was published on the front page of some newspapers and it was read; but the long, laborious decisions have not been read. They are buried beneath the bosom of the deep.

In the constitution it is written that when a judgment is reversed or affirmed by the supreme court, every point, fairly arising on the record of the case must be considered and decided. Hence, some judges spin out their decisions by noting and discussing every point noted by counsel, even though it be in no way material. They argue as if they were giving 10 reasons for the absence of a witness, the first reason being that he is dead. Of course, one such reason is quite sufficient; and so many lawsuits when one, two or three points are conclusive, it is sheer folly to discuss the other points.

In State vs. O'Hare, 1 N. D., the judge wrote a decision or commentary of 22 pages, when it should not have exceeded two pages—and there are thousands of similar cases in the reports. A judgment in charging the jury reversed because in charging the jury the court stated the facts and argued the case against the defendant. That was a dead conclusive point and the judge should not have spun out his decision and wasted his time by noting and discussing nine immaterial points.

If a judge wants to write a mere commentary on the law, he should do it at his own expense and not at the expense of the suitors and the public. To publish and look supreme court decisions does cost the public or someone about $20 a page. The cost is often more than the amount involved in the litigation. This, the judges never consider. They touch not the burden with one of their fingers. It is a public affair in which there is no business economy. By actual count of words it appears that the average length of our supreme court decisions have been much greater than those of any other state. They contain too much stuff; and that is a sorry complaint.

In early days our judges wrote mammoth sentences, covering whole pages. They throw together a mass of words, regardless of rules of grammar, composition or punctuation. It may be of interest to our grammar class to note a few short sentences from the decision in the first North Dakota reports: The judgment in this case must be reversed because the district court had lost jurisdiction of the case at the time the judgment was rendered. The judgment must be reversed because when it was rendered, the district court had lost jurisdiction of the case.

The action was pending in the district court at the time of the admission of the state into the union. R. At the time of the admission of the state into the union, the action was pending in the district court. The power of the state court is destroyed and the jurisdiction of the federal court attaches at once. R. The power of the state court is destroyed and the jurisdiction of the federal court attaches at once. R. The power of the state court is destroyed and the jurisdiction of the federal court attaches at once.

R. Before request the title of the federal court inchoate, but when a request is made its title is complete. The request is in itself the death of the old jurisdiction and the birth of the new. R. The request is in itself the end of the old jurisdiction and the beginning of the new. (Jurisdiction has neither death or birth.) Here is a good specimen of a bungling sentence: We will conclude this opinion by saying that it behooves this court in deciding the first criminal case ever brought to it for review, and that a case of homicide, not to allow a prejudicial charge upon the facts, such as we conceive that in this case to have been, to pass unchallenged and thereby to become a precedent. (1 N. D., 551.)

R. It behooves this court, in deciding its first criminal case, to allow no prejudicial charge upon the facts to pass unchallenged and to become a precedent. You must not load down a sentence like a beast of burden. You must not put two or three sentences or clauses between the subject and the predicate. You must see that the verb agrees with the subject in number and person and that prepositions govern the objective case. You must not say between him and I for between him and me. No sentence is well composed unless it is smooth, easily spoken and easily remembered.
