

Mother's Day

SUNDAY, May 9, should be one of the most sacred days in the entire year for on it we celebrate "Mother's Day."

While every day should be mother's day, yet it is well to set aside one day in the year for special observance of that dear person who always has been and always will be the dearest friend and pal any of us ever will have.

Mother's day fittingly falls on Sunday for there is something noble, holy and spiritual about the love of our mother. The love of our father, that of our brothers and sisters, our wives and our little children all are cherished by us, but none of them are the same as our love for that person, who in terrible pain, brought us on to this earth, nursed us through those childhood days when instinctively we ran to Mother for comfort, for protection, for warmth, for food, in fact for everything.

Those who are not near their mothers this Sunday should not let the day go by without a suitable remembrance to show to that distant loved one that even though the miles separate one from the other, yet the hearts are together. A letter, a telegram, flowers, anything that represents the loving thought that lies in our hearts on Mother's day should be sent to that perhaps gray haired and wrinkled face old lady whose tenderness, love and ability to overlook our many faults tried so hard to place our feet in the paths we should always tread, but perhaps at times strayed from.

Mother's day is every day, but let us make Sunday, May 9, significant of the love we bear the one who bore us, but which we so often neglect to show. She will be waiting. Will you let her wait needlessly?
