CURRENT TOPICS AT CAPITAL SCORES CANNON--JOHNSON

(By Willis J. Abbot)

Washington, May 3.—(Special)—One distinguished statesman who thinks that he is presidential timber is very likely in the coming campaign to discover that he has ceased to be even a congressional possibility. Speaker Cannon in the course of this congress has put himself in avowed opposition to practically everything that the voters of the United States demand, while carefully protecting all that the monopolies of the United States desire. No popular measure has passed his scrutiny. Even measures urged enthusiastically by the president of the United States have been denied a hearing by the speaker of the house of representatives. The bill to save the forests in the White mountains and along the Appalachian range has met his continual and bitter opposition. Many people think that the question of preserving the forests is one of sentiment a mere aesthetic idea; but in fact it means the saving of great industries hundreds of miles away, for if the forests are not preserved the water courses of the nation will be made into tumultuous floods in the spring and shallow rivulets thereafter. Every mill doing business with waterpower is interested in this. Mr. Cannon says concerning the men who are working to preserve the forests, among whom Mr. Roosevelt is easily the first, "I sometimes hear them talk; I sometimes wonder how much they know." With all respect to the speaker of the house of representatives it seems probable that the men who have made a specialty of this subject know more than a politician whose district includes no mountains and no forests and who is compelled to divide his attention between a multiplicity of bills and his determination to not allow any that may touch his precious tariff to even be reported to the house.

Again Speaker Cannon has put himself on record against the abolition of the duty on paper and wood pulp. He has appointed a committee with the purpose of putting this matter over until after election. While there are probably twenty bills, many of them presented by republican members, yet none has been allowed to be brought to a hearing nor to a vote. Then John Sharp Williams, the leader of the democrats in the house, presented a petition asking that someone be recognized to present a resolution providing for free paper and free wood pulp, signed by one hundred and sixty-two out of one hundred and sixty-four democratic members, and begged in vain for even a few republican signatures to it, he put the party of protection to the trusts thoroughly on record.

The Denver Platform.

In a speech delivered at Ann Arbor (Mich.) Gov. Johnson declared that he was for the democratic nominee, whomsoever he might be. He asserted that he would stand shoulder to shoulder with any nominee, provided the platform was right. Unhappily he did not go into detail as to what sort of a platform could be right. We have no doubt of Governor Johnson's personal devotion to democratic principles. We are compelled to doubt however the equal devotion of some of the supporters and champions who represent him. It is not a new thing in politics to accept a nominee and then attempt to destroy him with a platform which utterly misrepresents his views. If the democrats of the United States send delegates to Denver for the purpose of nominating Mr. Bryan they will send delegates there who will adopt a platform which will be approved by the friends and associates of Mr. Bryan who will represent his strength in that convention. If the democrats of the country send delegates who will nominate anybody else, it is perfectly fair and right that the platform should be in accordance with the opinions of that nominee.

It is not probable that at a democratic convention will commit the error of nominating a candidate and adopting a platform only to have that candidate repudiate the platform and attempt to change its whole tenor as Judge Alton B. Parker did in 1907. What happened to Parker is a matter of history.

The New England Situation.

Hon. George Fred Williams of Boston came to Washington today not for politics, but for business. However as Mr. Williams has just swung the state of Massachusetts into the column of real democracy he was kind enough to give a brief talk on the situation in the New England states.

Said Mr. Williams: "The fund of information which seems to have been piled up in Washington concerning the attitude of the New England democracy is large enough to surprise me, except for the fact that I have learned how little we know in New England through the press what is actually going on in the rest of the country. It is a surprise apparently to men in Washington to ascertain that the vote of New England in the Denver convention will be by a great majority for Mr. Bryan. Rhode Island has already acted, and no one disputes that seven out of eight delegates from that state are earnest Bryan men. In Connecticut a majority of the delegation may safely be counted for Mr. Bryan. Massachusetts will send thirty-two delegates pledged to Mr. Bryan. Maine has elected delegates from three districts, none of whom are opposed to Mr. Bryan and all of whom profess to be friendly to him. I am assured by leading men in New Hampshire and Vermont not a single delegate will go from those states who is not favorable to Mr. Bryan's candidacy. This statement is made in the case of every state with confidence, and those who count any considerable portion of our New England delegates against Mr. Bryan will be woefully disappointed. I do not think that in the whole New England delegation a single man will be, or has been, elected who is an avowed opponent of Mr. Bryan, or an avowed advocate of any other candidate. Neither has any state or district committee in New England dissented from his candidacy, by vote or resolution. In Massachusetts at the caucuses not a single candidate for delegate to Denver opposed to Mr. Bryan remained in the field. One gentleman retired before the caucuses were held declaring that he was not in favor of Mr. Bryan's candidacy, but that the sentiment in his district was evidently so strong for Mr. Bryan that his only course was to withdraw as a candidate. Governor Johnson was represented in one ward of the state on a caucus ticket. He was badly defeated. This is representative of New England. Our traditions are against instructions hence a refusal to instruct does not signify in our section real opposition."

Another Johnson Bureau.

Washington has been edified and pleased by the establishment here of a bureau intended to advance the presidential purposes of Governor Johnson. One or two of the better men in the press gallery of the capitol have been engaged to control his publicity campaign here. He has another bureau in Chicago, one in Minneapolis and several in lesser cities, besides having men traveling throughout the east and south in his interests. Yet it is bitterly, strenuously denied by Governor Johnson himself and by such unprejudiced and disinterested supporters as the New York World, for example, that anybody of large means or associated with the trusts and corporations that were back of Alton P. Parker in 1907 are helping Governor Johnson in his campaign. The salary of the governor of Minnesota is seven thousand dollars a year—rather a liberal one as gubernatorial salaries in western states run. But the expenditures in the Johnson campaign, which has been a brief one, too brief in fact for anyone who understands the national political situation, to take it seriously, must already have exceeded that income more than ten times. And so the question arises, whence comes the money? It has never been answered.

A bill is pending in congress for publicity campaign contributions. Mr. Bryan came to Washington and spoke in its behalf before the house committee having it in charge. It has since been reported, and may become a law. Governor Johnson has taken no apparent interest in it. It is altogether probable that the gentlemen who have taken this active financial interest in Governor Johnson's candidacy for the nomination, will take a like interest in his election—if nominated. If he retires upon them now, why will he not give to the public the names of the men who are financing his present campaign and who presumably in the event of his election would finance his presidential campaign? When a man is so little known to the electorate of the nation, it seems fair that he should state who are the people back of him and for whom he stands. If they are strong and influential men their names ought to add to the strength of his campaign.

Bad Attack of Dysentery Cured.

"An honored citizen of this town was suffering from a severe attack of dysentery. He told a friend if he could obtain a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, he felt confident of being cured, he having used this remedy in the west. He was told that I kept it in stock and lost no time in obtaining it, and was promptly cured," says M. J. Leach, druggist, of Wolcott, Vt. For sale by F. J. Ramsey and Hoffman Drug Co. d&w
