BREEZY LETTER FROM WASHINGTON REPUBLICANS SEE COMING CRISIS

Washington, April 30.—There can be no mistaking the fact that the Republicans are facing a critical stage of affairs. They have had two recent object lessons in the defeat of Republicans for Congress in districts where the Democrats had long ceased to look for success, until dissection this year renewed their courage. Some party men are not willing to admit that there is cause for alarm in these reversals of political form, but most honest men agree that it is but a sign of the times and an indication of the national unrest which will culminate in disaster at the polls next November unless some means be found to stem the tide of discontent.

It was a shock when Foss was elected to Congress in Massachusetts on a Democratic ticket, but is was infinitely more disconcerting when Rochester followed suit with the election of James S. Hays, a Democrat, in a district which should have given 10,000 plurality for the republican ticket; and that in spite of the fact that the boss of the district, George W. Aldridge, was the candidate against Hays.

In fact, it was the opinion of many persons, and some of them mighty wise politicians of the high tariff variety at that, that the democratic success was a rebuke to the effrontery of the leaders of the Republican party. "They had no business," said these persons, "to put up a boss like Aldridge for Representatives. The people have been crying out for some sort of concession, and the leaders have been thrusting them back with the assertion that they did not know what they wanted, and that they must come up to the rack and take their medicine without whimpering or else they were not true republicans and they would be read out of the party and that they might go and herd with the democrats or the prohibitionists or the socialists if they did not like the way the Republican party was being run. This sort of thing will not carry the election in November. I know we are sending out spellbinders into the insistent states, but we must do more than that. We must show that we are entitled to the confidence of the people."

With President Taft "sounding the keynote" on the stump during the summer and the ablest speakers in the

BETTER THAN SPANKING

Spanking does not cure children of bad wetting. There is a constitutional cause for this trouble. Mrs. M. Summers, Box W, South Bend, Ind., will send free to any mother her successful home treatment, with full instructions. Send no money, but write her today. If your children trouble you in this way, don't blame the child, the chances are it can't help it. This treatment also cures adults and aged people troubled with urine difficulties by day or night.

party followin' him up the Republicans are going to make a determined fight to sustain their prestige. The Democrats, however, are full of hope, and will put forth their best efforts. They say they are certain to capture control of the House of Representatives, in which event "Cannonism" will cease to be a bugbear and we shall probably have "Clarkism."

Business Methods for Government Work.

The efforts of Senator Burton to bring about a better business system in the distribution of money for the improvement of the nation's waterways did not avail much. His contention that the policy followed was not calculated to bring about the best results was, however, sound. Senator Newlands also has been a consistent advocate of co-operation and coordination by government department and he is enthusiastic for the systematic development and improvement of the rivers and harbors. He carries this policy through consistently. He would have, for instance, the same policy pursued in the building operations of the government. At present, he says, there are several bureaus or offices which are charged with preparing architectural plans for public structures. The Army and Navy prepare their own plans, sometimes hiring outside architects. The Marine Hospital service does the same. The Treasury department prepares all the custom houses, court houses and post-office buildings. In some cases public officials are authorized to hire architects. The system varies. The government has expended hundreds of millions of dollars on public works of various kinds, and there is no doubt but that millions have been lost in graft, theft and incompetent supervision. Besides, the quality of work has often been inferior. Some of the public buildings of the government are a standing disgrace to it. If the advice of such far-sighted men as Senator Newlands should be taken, there would be a new system introduced under which graft would be eliminated and the highest possible artistic expression would result.

People Want Cook Book.

When Secretary of Agriculture Wilson issued a book telling how to utilize the cheaper cuts of meat to the best advantage, some persons were disposed to smile cynically about the government's "cook book." The public, however, hailed it as just what had been wanted. The demand began to grow from the date the book was issued, and in a short time its circulation passed that of the "best-seller" on the market. Congressmen sent in requests by the hundred for it, and 100,000 copies were sent out almost before the amazed Agricultural Department knew what had happened. Another big edition was ordered, and probably more will be printed and issued as long as there remains any demand for it.

The phenomenal demand indicates that the people in this country have not spurned the cheaper cuts of meat because they despised them, but rather because they have not been educated how to make the best use of them.

Pheasant Fanciering.

The Department of Agriculture has now issued a new treatise, telling how to breed pheasants. Some years ago the Monahan pheasant was successfully introduced into Oregon, where it thrived so well under the protective laws that when the public was permitted to hunt it, a bag of 50,000 was recorded for the first day's shooting. The success of this venture led to the rearing of pheasants in many localities and in some cases on a large scale. The birds are popular for public and private parks and game preserves. The price of pheasants ranges from $5 to $150 or more per pair. While easy to raise, they are subject to various diseases and a short treatise is given on their complaints. The brochure of the department on pheasants will be found very interesting to persons who have a liking for breeding fowls, and the prospect is held out that it will prove profitable.

Baseball Craze.

Washington is baseball mad. All afternoon after he game has begun in New York, or Cleveland, or Chicago, or some other village where the teams cross bats, crowds stand in the streets of Washington watching the electric bulletin boards which record the plays, and from time to time the workers in adjacent buildings can hear the cheers that greet successful plays, or mark the scoring of a tally. It's great; but the fellows inside are likely to chafe because of their temporary imprisonment. On the opening day of the season in Washington over 12,000 persons paid admission into the ball park to see President Taft toss the first ball, and to witness the corking good game that was put up.

there are many Senators and Representatives there too, and he said that the gentlemen from the Capitol are as enthusiastic fans as one will find anywhere. May Investigate Bonaparte.

There is a mine under former Attorney General Bonaparte, and it may be exploded at any time. Senator Borah is standing, match in hand, ready to touch it off. For almost a year, now, the Senator has been carrying around a resolution calling for an investigation to ascertain why Bonaparte refused to prosecute the sugar trust. He was on the point of offering the resolution last summer, but he was persuaded not to do so on the ground that it would embarrass the Government in its prosecution of the sugar fraud scandals, give away the plans of the prosecution and perhaps enable some of the men involved to secure immunity baths. Rather against his desire, Senator Borah consented to wait for the Government to take action. He is now persuaded that the reasons urged last summer for staying his resolution are no longer operative. He is still of the opinion that the action of the trust, in voluntarily paying fines amounting to some $2,000,000 directly and emphatically discredited the assertion of the Attorney General that there was no ground for action, and he is likely to ask for a congressional investigation almost any time. Such an investigation, he thinks, would result in interesting disclosures.

Wants West to Unite.

In the opinion of Senator Borah, of Idaho, the time has arrived for the West to make a stand against the policy of the Eastern conservationists, which, he fears, will result in the strangulation by red tape methods of the development of the West. He declares that the conservationists, led by Pinchot, Garfield, Hewell and others, have fought every policy which meant development of the Western states and territories. He cites the proposal to issue $20,000,000 of reclamation bonds as a case in point. Garfield and Hewell opposed this. He recalls the ineffectual opposition to the Warren bill, which enabled co-operation between the Government and private owners of land in building reservoirs and irrigation ditches. He also had in mind the question of granting permission for transferring irrigation homesteads on reclamation projects after five years' residence. This was opposed on the ground that transferees should be permitted only to persons who were qualified home-owners. This, said Senator Borah, would reduce the value of the lands by reducing the market for them. He scouted the contention that to permit relinquishment would be to encourage "absentee landlordism." Said he: "These people would prevent the development of the West except by red tape rules from Washington. They would throttle all local initiative and enterprise. They want to withdraw power sites from use and keep vast areas of agricultural lands locked up in forest reserves increasing local taxation and holding back its growth."

The fight of the West and Alaska has been against the withdrawal from use of coal, oil and agricultural lands. When the conservation bill came up for discussion in the House, Mr. Smith of California referred to the complaint of the conservationists that too much coal was being mined. "Very well," he said, "where shall we lop off consumption first?" And they could not tell him, for no coal was being mined that there was not a demand for.
