society editor any idea of agitating the question in these columns, but a recent article in Harper's by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe was told in such an interesting "home-like" manner that the subject gained renewed interest in the little bit of history she gave in connection with her personal interest in the movement. It seems that Mrs. Howe, like a great many of us, viewed the question with unpersonal interest, being "agin" it not from personal conviction but because we had given the subject no deep thought or investigation and the necessity for it had not entered her life. In those days Lucy Stone was going about lecturing and Mrs. Howe attended a Boston lecture. You remember Lucy Stone was the young woman who devoted her talents to woman's suffrage in its early days of agitation. She was the daughter of a New England farmer and a woman of powerful attraction and intellect. Her mother had milked nine cows a few hours before her birth and regretted that her baby was a girl "because a woman's lot is so hard."

When this little girl was large enough she drove those same cows to pasture when the weather was so cold that her legs and feet were numb. She was what old Mr. Tolliver would have called a "sharp up." And asked her mother when she was but a youngster why women had so much harder time than men and her mother gave her the scriptural injunction from Paul that women should keep quiet.

She determined to find out about this for herself and read the Bible in the original language.

Farmer Stone refused her a college education.

*Send a daughter to college—no

indeed; the girl must be mad to think about it!"

He didn't exactly agree with the Hindus who threw the girl babies in the river, but he didn't see any reason why he should spend any money on a girl.

But she earned her way through college and one of the proudest moments she experienced was when she learned in the original Hebrew that "lalleo" meant to chatter, not to speak seriously.

Mrs. Howe became a convert to Woman's suffrage and exerted her influence to further the movement.

I give Mrs. Howe's rather spirited account of her attendance in the first congress in her own words:

A task of some difficulty was assigned me at this congress. The constant reference by male opponents of woman's suffrage to the sacred duties of maternity had suggested to some of us that it might at some time be appropriate to present a woman's view of the obligation of maternity. This duty now devolved upon me. The paper was accordingly written and presented, not without anxiety. It was heard with attention and called forth no unfriendly comment. Indeed, I think I might say that it was received with acceptance. It has sometimes both amused and angered me to hear a college youth, a freshman, presumably, admonish his grand-mother, or a woman of age thereto corresponding, concerning the sacredness and importance of the function of motherhood.

I will try to recall here some features of the journeys of A. A. W. to the place in which the congress was to be held.

On the occasion just now present to my recollection, I rose very early in the chill of the November morning. My first act was to review the packing accomplished on the previous evening, assuring myself that my knickerbockers, gloves, and MSS. were already in my valise. The carriage was waiting at the door; I asked the choreman if the steps were slippery. He should have known, for he had just aspersed them with water, which froze without loss of time. He offered to assist me, the result being that we rolled down the steps together, I landing on my head. With little delay, I leaped into the waiting vehicle and was driven to the station, where I was soon joined by a cheering party of friends. Among them I was glad to see Mrs. Ednah Cheney, with one or two of her special intimates.

Our friends at once observed that I had met with an accident. One of them was despatched to the nearest pharmacy for a bottle of hamamelis, with which I bathed my facial bruises, not sparing time to consult the mirror. When, some hours later, I accidentally caught a glimpse of myself, I was shocked at the spectacle which my bonnet presented. I exclaimed, "Dear friends, why did you not tell me that my bonnet was awry?" The answer was that their thoughts, like my own, were intent upon other matters.

Daughters of the Confederacy in Muskogee.

Foremost among the many good works that the Daughters of the Confederacy are doing throughout this state, in caring for aged and helpless veterans, is building a home for Confederate veterans and widows. A bill was passed in the state legislature whereby maintenance for the home is provided the duty of erecting this home falls upon the southern people of the state, and particularly upon the Daughters of the Confederacy. The chapter in this city has raised a fund of $250 which was originally intended to be used for a monument in one of the city parks, but feeling that this home for veterans would be a greater monument than any of marble, the chapter pledged at the last meeting, $500 toward building the home, and their monument fund will go toward making a part of this amount. Interest in the work of the chapter is growing with every meeting, and the membership has reached seventy in number. Delegates to the state convention to be held in July at Oklahoma City were elected, these being Mrs. Theodore Gulick and Mrs. Sam P. Nicholson. Throughout the summer months a series of teas, informal parties and dances, will be given by the Daughters, for the organization, true to the spirit of the PEACE DAY.

(By Lucia Ames Mead.)

In 1907, the school superintendents at their annual meeting recommended to all schools the observance of May 18—the anniversary of the First Hague Conference. A dozen states had previously observed the day and since the leaflets and material for school use upon that day have become generally known through the School Peace League, special exercises, as long as those on Flag day or Memorial day should become general. As full information regarding programs can be obtained of the Secretary of the School Peace League, Mrs. Andrews, 405 Marlborough street, Boston, or of the Secretary of the American Peace Society, 21 Beacon street, Boston, I shall limit this article to general matters, which may help make these programs useful.

First of all, the teacher must be an enthusiastic believer in world organization and arbitration. If Peace day is to inspire her pupils, if she has imagination and a clear comprehension of the subject she can make any class, even the Primary class, feel the thrill of the great war against war which this day celebrates. By picturing the old time duel, for example, that between Burr and Hamilton, she can show how the duel proved nothing and the best man often fell. Even a small child readily sees the silliness of duels after courts are once established and can be led on to see the folly of gigantic duels between nations if an international court becomes available. The story of the formation of the Permanent Tribunal of Arbitration should be told as one of the greatest events of history, marking an epoch. It can be told picturesquely and in the simplest words. First tell of the Tsar's receipt, that August day in 1898, like a bolt from the blue startling the world with an unheard of proposition and showing how the awful increase of armaments "were bringing about the very cataclysm they were designed to avert." In short, preparation for war, through the rapidity of new inventions in armaments was becoming as costly as war itself. The decade since this receipt has painfully emphasized this fact, the United States paying as much for army and navy in 1908 in time of peace as it paid ten years before in time of war. After the script followed, nine months later, the coming together of one hundred representatives with fifty attaches in Queen Wilhelmina's little palace, "The House in the Wood, at the Hague." These represented the twenty-six nations that had ambassadors at St. Petersburg. They came together full of indifference or cynicism, expecting for the most part mere perfunctory action. They excluded reporters as did the Constitutional Congress in 1787. But with the sceptics were strong men of faith, among them our English ambassador—Lord Pauncefote—and our own minister to Berlin, Andrew D. White. These and a few others created hope and confidence and soon, in one of the three committees, every man found himself at work and through endless social functions coming into friendly touch with strangers, rubbing off prejudices and enlarging his power and comprehending their point of view.

Once, when Germany's inaction that summer seemed to block the way and frustrate all possibility of harmony, public opinion in America helped to melt the iceberg of opposition. Mr. White sent Mr. Holls of the New York bar to Berlin to see H. von Holle and Von Euelow. He was told that Germany as a whole cared little about the Conference and no one supposed America really cared! These diplomats were indeed amazed to see the piles of letters and telegrams which revealed that, far and wide, clubs, boards of trades, churches and all kinds of organizations in America had been pouring urgent messages to our delegation. One of these was signed by thirty-one Baptist clergymen in Oregon, each of whom paid a dollar to send it. The one that influenced the Germans most was a prayer written by a Bishop of Texas to be prayed in every church of his diocese while the Conference lasted.

As a result of this first Conference a Permanent Tribunal of Arbitration was established for which Mr. Carnegie has provided a building at a cost of one and a half million dollars. This is not yet completed. A dozen or more nations have taken cases to this court. Provisions made by this Conference prevented war between Russia and England over the firing on English fishing vessel as was related in Article III of this series. It was also by provision of this Conference for mediation that President Roosevelt called to Kittery navy yard the representatives of two great nations to end the bloodiest war of modern times.

This war could have been avoided had the world been a little organized. Since then the second Hague Conference has taken further steps in world organization. It is certain now that at regular intervals a world conference merging into a Parliament with ever-increasing powers will meet. Executive commissions will eventually carry out its decisions and in international police force—a totally different thing from rival armies and navies—will keep law and order.

The first steps toward this are arbitration treaties between the great nations promising to settle all difficulties between them by law or arbitration. The teacher will of course tell her pupils the story of such a treaty between Chili and Argentina and of the erection of the Christ of the Andes on the loftiest mountain pass as a pledge of perpetual peace.

Four thoughts should be emphasized: 1. Organization—this is an age of power such as the world never saw before because men have learned to co-operate. Picture the condition of our states if they had not been federated; of the German and Italian states before they were united. Emphasize the fact that peace between nations is not a question of making men into saints but of organizing them in practical business fashion. The United States must be an exemplar of a United World. 2. This country has no danger from without but fearful dangers from within. 3. Peace develops all the virtues, even the highest courage, better than war. 4. Citizens of our favored land are better able than any other to lead the world toward peace.

Far more care needs to be taken to prepare for Peace day than for any other instruction of the year because of the misconceptions among teachers as well as the public regarding the peace movement. The teaching must of course, be in perfect harmony with the thought of reverence for the brave men who fought for independence and to preserve the Union, and sharp distinction must be made between past civil wars which could not have been prevented by a Hague Court, had one existed, and future international war for which we now have substitutes—if we will but use them.

Indians tell a story, says Lippincott's, of Senator Beveridge's entrance into politics when he was little more than a boy. He won the liking of the governor of the state by a quaint little speech he made during the presentation of a petition by a delegation whose spokesman was insufferably long-winded and tedious. The man talked to the governor nearly an hour, during which everyone stood. To all it seemed that it would never end. When, however, it finally did, the governor asked wearily if the delegates wished to offer any further reasons for the granting of the petition. Whereupon Beveridge remarked: "If you don't grant it, governor, we'll have that speech repeated to you."
