HOW TO CARTOON LESSON 3

ANATOMY
 (This is the third of a series of ten lessons in cartooning which will appear each Tuesday for ten weeks. Clip and save them, and practice.)
 The examples of the human figure shown here are the ideal figures as set down by the Greeks. It is well to study them closely so that you will be better able to caricature them, and still retain a likeness.
 Figure 1 shows the human body divided into eight parts—or heads. The head is the standard of measurement. The entire body, you see, is eight heads high. The arm and hand, together, are four and three-quarters heads in length. Other portions of the body are measured in the same way. There really is no exact standard of measurement, for figures vary, but this is a good one to go by.
 In Figure 2 is shown a child's body, likewise proportioned. Notice that the head is but one-fifth the length of the body.
 The face, as drawn by the Greeks and made to scale, is shown in Figure 3. From the bottom of the chin to the top of the nostrils is one-third of a head. From the chin to the eyebrow and top of ear is two-thirds of a head. From the top of the forehead to the eye is one-half of a head.
 Figure 4 shows features of the face drawn true to nature and then caricatured to carry out the general likeness of the features.
 Hands need careful attention, owing to their importance, for they not only assist greatly in expressing emotion, but they appear very often in your cartoons. You will find it easy to draw them if you first sketch them in as in Figure 5.
 When drawing a hand holding something, "wrap" it around the thing, blocking it in as a solid piece of flesh. Then draw in the fingers, and other details, as in Figure 6.
 Avoid the common mistake of joining the hand directly to the arm. Make a wrist. Figure 7 shows the right and wrong way of making the hand and joining it to the arm.
 If you wish to draw a shoe, draw a bare foot first, then add the shoe. Don't forget to make an ankle. Include the slight rise in the tip of the toes, and the projecting heel. See Figure 8.
 When you make hair on the head of a character don't attempt to draw every hair. Draw it in masses. Draw it first in "blocks" form as in Figure 9, and then sketch in the lines as in Figure 10.
 Lesson four, next, Tuesday will concern clothing.

Dingbats

Ma just told me to give the goldfish fresh water. I've looked but they ain't fished. What I gave them yesterday.

PUZZLES AND RIDDLES
 1. How can you make a slow horse fast?
 2. What are the two hottest letters in the alphabet?
 Answers: 1. Tie him to a post. 2. K. N. (cayenne).
