

THE LOVE OF A LIEUTENANT.

HARRY TIFFANY IMMORTALIZES HIMSELF.

He Marries a Pretty Girl in Spite of Opposition--Scene in a Chicago Hotel--Pay Warrents Versus Faro Banks--The Gay Benedict Abandons the Army.

A LIVELY ROMANCE.

Lieut. Harry Tiffany has proven more of a romancer than a soldier. He was christened with the right kind of a name. He dreamed as a boy that "Harry Tiffany" was destined for no common role in life's play. Harry was born in Baltimore and raised in a family of intelligence and wealth. He was a rich "scapgrace" and ran away from home as all scapgraces of that school do. He joined the regular army as a private. He was a large, fine-looking, jolly, gentlemanly fellow. Everybody liked Harry and appreciated his merits. He was promoted to the rank of a sergeant. His presence in the army was unknown to his parents. Their prodigal son was lost to them forever. They were anxious for his return and willing to forgive. By one of those peculiar book accidents--accidents that you read of--they heard of Harry's enlistment, his regiment and post. At once they went to Washington, and through their political influence had Harry made an officer--second lieutenant in the eleventh Infantry and stationed at Fort Custer.

Last spring he came down to Bismarck and went east on leave. He was now from the far off Fort Custer, in the valley of the Little Big Horn and the historical battle-field where the flower of the Seventh Cavalry died. He was a knight and his handsome person seemed the embodiment of thrilling romance.

In Baltimore he met one more interesting than even his fond parents. They had been children together, and the elegant Miss Barrett was as much interested in the Don Cesar De Bazan as she had been in the young rake. Later she came out to Fort Custer to visit a sister, the wife of one of the bravest captains in the service.

The sixth of September she arrived in Bismarck with a military party on the steamer Gen. Sherman. Here an uncle from New York City met her. The uncle was commissioned to protect her from the smiles and meetings of Harry Tiffany, and he came all the way to Bismarck to see that it was effectually done. Her relatives were opposed to their intimacy and naturally feared the marital climax. Here Miss B. plead with the "dear uncle" for one with the lieutenant. He protested against all interviews and wouldn't listen to her sweet prayers. The uncle thought the lieutenant was in this neighborhood. The lady after some reflection met the old gentleman with this proposition:

"Will you permit me to see him if I happen to meet him in Chicago?"

The uncle thought a minute, soliloquizing that there was no danger in according to that request, as there was no human probability of Harry turning up in Chicago. The uncle replied "yes."

In another minute Miss Barrett was in the telegraph office hastily penning a dispatch to Harry Tiffany in an eastern city: "Meet me at the Palmer House, Chicago."

In two days the uncle and niece were at the palace hotel of the world. The first friend they met was Harry. The uncle was more astonished than the niece. Either his diplomacy was weak or Providence was standing by the girl. They desired a private interview. The uncle had given his word and that was as good as his bond. He again said "yes," but it was not without some misgivings. They went up stairs and down another pair into the street. In a few minutes they were in the house of a preacher, and in a few more they were married.

Upon their return to the hotel the lieutenant was the first to meet the uncle. He inquired for his niece. "She is up in my room." They went up together and the bold Harry squared himself, and in the best English at his command, introduced

"MRS. TIFFANY."

"Great God!" exclaimed the old man. Not only that, but a regular stage storm of denunciation followed.

Physically, Harry was the equal of half a dozen uncles, and was scarcely red in the face. He smiled at the uncle's rage and invoked him to keep cool.

It was too late. "Let us have peace." The uncle's good sense got the better of him, and he acknowledged love's superior strategy.

The next day Lieut. Tiffany received a telegram summoning him as a witness before the court martial of Capt. Pease, second cavalry, to convene at Fort Keogh. That was a cruel telegram. The husband obeyed and took the train for St. Paul. The wife and uncle started in the opposite direction.

At St. Paul Harry found himself short of funds and sold two monthly pay accounts of $128 each. Reaching Bismarck he sold two more for August and September. The following morning the bankers check for $100 came in from a Faro bank. Harry had been and the tiger had worried him. After Harry had reached Keogh the banker discovered the pay accounts were forgeries. He wrote him demanding settlement. After some forcible hints he responded with a check for $100 on his brother's bank east. The brother, in due time, answered that it was worthless, and refused to shoulder it. Meanwhile, Harry recognizing the inevitable, concluded to desert. He left Keogh about the first of November and reached Chicago via the Hills and the Union Pacific. In Bismarck he would have been arrested, hence the longer distance in jumping the country. In Chicago he was shadowed, but by his characteristic strategy, easily escaped the sergeant. Since then Tiffany has not been heard from. He is a nephew of Gen. Joe Johnston, and may have a saving influence at the war department.

Some empirics resort to embrocations, which are all dangerous. It is now acknowledged to be a blood disease resulting from acidity. This aperient corrects all such acidity, and thus cures the disease. All rheumatic sufferers are advised to try it.
