

TRIBUNE BREAKFAST TABLE.

Smiles to be Sandwiched in with the Solemnities of Sunday.

"Yes, give us fun and laughter, And hand the smile around; We cannot laugh much after They put us in the ground."

Sitting Bull's Address.

When the Pushman Palace Army wagon which bore Sitting Bull back to the reservation was sighted by Standing Rock, a wild cheer went up from the assembled multitude, and when the panting mules were reined up in front of the distinguished chief's palatial teepee, he found that his people had turned out to meet and greet him in all their strength.

When the old chief had descended from the wagon there was a loud call for a speech, and with a look of modest pride he mounted a bacon hoghead and began:

WARBANDS OF THE GREAT SIOUX SYNDICATE: (Syndicate is a new word I borrowed up in Bismarck.) My heart is dancing the racquet over the pleasure of meeting you again. I have been to the great capital city. I have assisted in laying the corner stone of Dakota's capital, have mixed promiscuously with the Bismarkians and yet I come back to you loaded down with the same cargo of virgin purity I bore away.

"Warriors, I have seen much. My eyes have been opened. The power of the white man has never been fully understood. When I stood upon that platform before the surging multitude and saw Tom Causby in his regimentals the Great Spirit whispered to me that to again go to war with this great people would be madness.

When Capt. Harmon's voluptuous voice fell upon my ear as he ordered the wagon of the granger to back up, I felt that we must never again fight along the war path while he lingers upon Dakota soil. The white man's power is great. I never fully realized his strength until the moment when amid all the imposing ceremonies I stood to the windward of Uncle Rufus Hatch after his Yellowstone trip.

"Would that I could picture to you the scene at the laying of that corner stone. It would paralyze you! When the aged and time-toughened dignitaries stepped forward and dropped into it the relics which posterity will some day handle and wonder over, I felt that the occasion was a momentous one. Our poor editor from the eastward pinned his last fifty cent pin plaster to a copy of his Sunday edition, and all of you who have been in my vicinity on a warm day know that in the pomp and circumstance of reservation life, my strength is great. (Cheers.)

"Warriors, you have stood by and witnessed the great dress parades of the soldiers. You have seen the officers in all their pride and dignity, their gorgeous uniforms flashing in the declining sun, their eyes lit up with patriotic fire, their forms erect upon their prancing steeds and their every movement marked with a heroic grace, but if you could have seen Joe Fox on horseback in that great parade you would have laid right down in the dust and yelled 'enough!' We must never again think of war. (Confusion and muttered expressions of disappointment.)

"Warriors, you all know me. You all know that the old man is not easily dazed, but when I saw Jim Wakeman standing erect in all the pride of vigorous manhood and a red shirt I felt that my name was Dennis. I couldn't march in the same division with him in a Fourth of July procession. (Sobs.)

"In my infancy my aged and revered father used to show me a picture which he stole from the post trader. It was a picture of George Washington at the head of his troops. As I gazed upon that scene and noted the erect pride of the old hero, his flashing eye, his look of conscious pride, his leaping steed with nostrils distorted and every nerve quivering at the brazen notes of war my youthful, hot impetuous blood bounded in my veins and the fever of ardor burned within me until I felt as fat as a mink. Then as I drew I prayed to the Great Spirit to some day permit me to gaze upon such a hero. That prayer has been more than answered. It may have been a mistake, but in replying to that petition the Great Spirit gave me every nerve tingled with ecstatic pleasure, and my soul bounded with a rapturous delight when these aged and fast dimming eyes fell upon Capt. Moorhouse as he dashed here and there on his dollar-an-hour steed, and yelled to the small boys to get out of his way or he'd get down and kick Helena out of them! (Some more applause.)

"I was honored with a call for a speech, and I responded with the innate modesty and grace for which I am noted. I will not here repeat what I said upon the occasion, because I don't want to give it away to our paleface neighbors how the interpreter played it on them. It wouldn't be right.

"Warriors, I have done. I cannot say more. Some day, when you go to Bismarck, you will meet some of these great heroes, and you will concede that their grandeur is great. Ta, ta."

A Mastodon.

The tooth of a mastodon, which was found twenty miles above the mouth of Cannon Ball creek on a sandbar, was on exhibition at the office of Harmon & McLean Saturday. Although it has crumbled somewhat through the ravages of time, it still weighs about fifteen pounds and is one of the molar teeth. Judging from this mammoth tooth the animal was of a herbivorous nature and must have been at least forty feet long and twenty feet high, and its weight must have been enormous. This single tooth is almost as large as a horse's head, and gives evidence of tremendous muscular development. It proves a number of theories to be true. In the first place it gives evidence of a mastodontian race of animals in Dakota, and gives undoubted proof of a proterozoic climate where now the thermometer indicates thirty degrees below zero during many winter days. When this gigantic masticating bone was in place it ground

FRUIT AND SHADE.

The North Pacific Tree Commissioner Gives Some Interesting Facts Concerning Trees.

He Will Establish an Experimental Farm near Bismarck and Cultivate Trees.

Important to Dakota.

Mr. Geo. H. Wright, who is employed by the North Pacific railroad to look after the timber and fruit interests along the line of the road, has been in the city for the purpose of ascertaining the qualities of soil and climate with regard to their adaptability to successful horticultural operations. Mr. Wright is from the agricultural college at Ames, Iowa, and is thoroughly versed in the science so essential to the welfare of the northwest. He is a practical man and will be the means of establishing an admirable timber system in North Dakota. He gave the reporter the following facts:

A year ago the Iowa agricultural college sent Prof. Budd, in company with Prof. Gibb, to Russia to discover, if possible, what success attended tree culture in that northern climate. He went to eastern Russia and the 56th parallel of north latitude with a view of finding trees and fruit that would thrive in the northwestern territory of America, and to be sure of the hardiness of the trees he sought a portion of the country where the winters were as cold and summers as warm as here, and with less rainfall. There he found men of wealth and prominence making a business of tree culture and fruit raising; peach and cherry trees were used for shade along the streets, and in that benighted land was found the most perfect forest tree system in the world, and large groves of timber were successfully grown with only a rainfall of six inches. There are over 700 Russian government forestry stations, the least of which has 7,000 trees and many of them 30,000, and each station is presided over by graduates of agricultural colleges. There they grow oaks for railroad ties, about fifty varieties of trees, seeds and cuttings have been ordered from there to be planted in North Dakota and the northwest.

has been submitted by W. F. Steele, to have the farm established at or near Steele, the county seat of Kidder county, and Mr. Wright is of the opinion that it will be established at that point. Among the trees which he mentioned as being the best adapted to this climate, are the American box elder and white ash. A few European trees will also be tried, including the quercus pedunculata oak and the arborescent caryopsis. This will be one of the most important movements in the interest of Dakota which this great road has taken, and it is to be hoped that Mr. Wright's efforts will be rewarded with the most flattering success.

Frisby's Specialities.

Frank Frisby, the famous druggist on the corner of Fourth and Main streets, has his usual complete stock of drugs, stationery, fancy articles and novelties, but the articles in which he excels all competitors are Frisby's corn killer and Frisby's bonnet balsam. Why suffer the agonizing pains and burning sting of a mean pestiferous corn when a few applications of this wonderful yet simple cure will relieve you? Why walk about the streets like a shadow, with the grave gaping and beckoning to its chilly folds when Frisby's Bonnet Balsam will restore you to perfect manhood? This indefatigable apothecary has spared no time or money in securing these meritorious compounds and the suffering and afflicted should not fail to give them a fair and unbiased trial.

The Advertiser, the Bismarck evening paper, having outlived its usefulness, quietly folded its drapery Thursday, and laid down to sleep the quiet sleep that knows no waking. Several reasons might be given for the demise, any one of which would be sufficient to cause death. The principal one was the lack of business management and editorial discretion. Both proprietors were active young men, but they lacked business training. Mr. Palmer was a practical job printer, but that is all that can be said of him. Job printing and newspaper work are two separate and distinct branches, and a man may be successful in the one while he would make a failure of the other. Mr. LaShelle is a young man of more than ordinary ability, and but for the lack of discretion would have made a success of the Advertiser. Even in the calmest sea a ship needs an experienced mariner at the wheel; so with a newspaper. There is not an issue but that needs the close observance of a cautious and far-seeing mind. Often the most trifling mistake leads on to abject despair. A succession of mistakes is the cause of the death of the Advertiser. Proper editorial management, in connection with the natural push and enterprise of Mr. LaShelle, would have made the Advertiser a success almost phenomenal in the history of newspaper ventures, but Mr. LaShelle made the same mistake that others have made in that he considered his own judgment superior to all other minds and susceptible of no dictation. The failure, while of course causing temporary embarrassment will prove of vast benefit to Mr. LaShelle. The two essential elements of success in a newspaper, viz: an editor and a business manager, will in future ventures be observed, and with these precautions there is no reason why Mr. LaShelle cannot make a success of the newspaper business.

The Capital of last evening commits the grave mistake of crowing over the defeat of its unfortunate adversary. It even goes so far as to flaunt its victorious flag with threats toward the TRIBUNE. The Capital is less than a month old and it may yet see the day when pity rather than jest should attend the funeral of a defunct newspaper. Such folly is as contained in last evening's Capital, is all the more execrable emanating as it does from the mind of a man reputed with great newspaper skill and discretionary sagacity.

Another Wholesale Store. Captain A. M. Johnson has purchased the stock of boots and shoes formerly owned by Thomas Bush, on Main street, known as the Chicago boot and shoe store, and will secure larger quarters for the purpose of opening a first-class wholesale and retail boot and shoe store. Mr. Johnson is a man whose reputation in Bismarck and the Missouri Valley will insure him an extensive business. He has conducted steamers up and down the raging muddy for years; he has buffeted the winds of the valley and the waves of the treacherous streams with triumphant success, he has managed his sturdy boat, fore and aft; he has trimmed her spars, top sails and pinions, has never known such word as fail, and will steer the boot and shoe business with the same caution, accuracy and success that has marked his career as a riverman.

It will Save Millions. A good safe is one of those blessings which is essential to the happiness and security of a business man. It is an invention which brings down the honor and esteem of nations upon the inventor. It has saved millions from the treacherous hands of the thief and flames, and is destined to save millions more. It is acknowledged by all that the most unique and substantial safe manufactured is that which is offered to the public by Mosler, Bahmann & Co., of Chicago. This safe is composed of numerous layers of the heaviest iron and steel, and has stood the test of fire and burglars without changing its impregnable aspect one iota. Mr. E. B. Ellison, the gentlemanly and efficient agent, who has been in Bismarck for some time, has sold a large number of these safes here, and reports the trade rapidly increasing along the line.

FARGO Republican: The Bismarck Tribune came out in grand style on the morning of the 5th, the day the Villard party arrived there. It contained sixteen pages of interesting reading matter and presented a neat typographical appearance.
