LAST CHANCE TO GET WATER WITHOUT BONDS

J. B. Marvin and Associates Withdraw Their Entire Proposition.

HEAVY TAX LEVY IS ONLY RECOURSE LEFT

Long Investigation of Experts Counts for Nothing With City.

ANOTHER chance for Tulsa to get a water system without having to vote a bond issue and pay for it by a tax levy went glimmering yesterday morning when J. B. Marvin and his associates withdrew their proposal to install a storage reservoir at Shell creek and supply the city with portable water at a fixed rate per thousand gallons of consumption.

A Year Wasted.

The same attitude was shown to Marvin and his associates and after nearly a year's quiet investigation, including even the problem of acquiring title to the reservoir site and rights-of-way they concluded that it was useless to press a further consideration of their proposition.

The opponents to the proposition to allow any private company to install a plant to supply the city at its intake and pumping station base their opposition mostly generally upon the ground that it will add to the present cost of water to consumers and they argue that if this were applied on the cost of installing the plant by the city that the debt could be wiped out.
