Cupid Beats Landlord.

The young bride-to-be was bounding with joy for she had at last found a way to beat the profiteering landlords. For some time it looked as though there would be no wedding in May because the young couple could find no place to live. At least they could find no quarters which were within the price limit which they had set. The little bride-to-be had been discouraged and had finally decided to go without some things and take every penny of their joint savings and buy a house.

Again, however, profiteering frustrated the plans for the exorbitant prices asked for the most modest houses made the savings look pitifully small indeed. Owners, the couple found, knew it was almost impossible to rent and so they charged any fabulous price they could think of.

Many days, after long hours spent in house hunting and apartment hunting, the bride-to-be would return home and weep because she could find no little nest for two. Finally, when it looked as if there would be no wedding at all, mother and father came to the rescue.

For just a fraction of the savings the old home could be re-converted into a two-family house, or at least a small suite or four or five rooms could be fitted up for the young couple. Would the young prospective son-in-law be willing to live so near his "in-laws"? Would he nearly went wild with joy at the mere thoughts of having a place to live. And so it was settled. And now these two young turtles are having as much fun with the plans of their "suite" as they would have if they were building their own house. The young bride modeling that she is going to surprise her spouse with such luxuries as a victrola and a vacuum cleaner. "Heat of all" the young couple agree, "in the safety we will feel. These will be no ogre landlord to

CLUB EVENTS

Unique Recital.

The work of the matrons will be presented to the public in a recital this afternoon at 2 o'clock in the high school auditorium, when the 2000 young society chamber of music, a group of eminent artists, with Caroline Bine at the head, will interpret a wonderful program with strong and varied instruments. This is the only performance of the kind here and the announcement of their coming has been favorably heralded and has elicited much interest on the part of local music lovers.
