Practical Housekeeping

By FLORENCE AUSTIN CHASE.

Rules for Service.
I have had so many questions come to me regarding the proper serving of meals, I am sure a few simple rules will be welcome at this time. There are certain rules that always hold good. With these as a foundation any woman can teach a maid of average intelligence to serve acceptably within a very short time.

Serving—Company Luncheon or Dinner.—The first course is usually served on the table before the guests are seated. This course usually consists of fruit or fish. If soup follows the appetizer, the soup dishes are filled in the kitchen and placed upon service plates. Passing to the right of each person, the maid removes the dishes of the previous course as she replaces them with the soup. The plates of the soup course are removed in relation to warm ones for the meat course are substituted.

If the meat is carved in the kitchen it is passed on a platter which has been provided with a fork for service. To the left of each person, in like manner the vegetables and sauces are passed. The meat and vegetables should be returned to the kitchen to be kept warm for a second helping.

As the plates of this course are removed they are replaced by plates containing the individual salad. As soon as all are served with the salad, the waiters are passed to the left of each person.

Before dessert is served all dishes, silver and salt and peppers are removed (cut and candy dishes being retained), and the table is crumbed, brushing with a folded napkin onto a plate.

If the dessert is to be served in individuals, such as molded dessert, the silver fork or spoon as the case may be is placed for each person. Then the dessert is brought in and served. If the dessert be brick ice cream, for instance, it should be placed on a platter and passed to the left of each person, then cake or wafers are passed in like manner. The demitasse cups are filled in the kitchen and the maid places one at the right of each person, then the sugar is passed.

A few general rules:
Serve everything that one drinks—tea, coffee, water—at the right.
Exchange individual plates at the right.
Pass to the left all dishes from which those at the table serve themselves. (Every dish should be provided with a spoon and fork for service). See that the maid walks quietly and places the dishes on the table gently.
See that anything used for liquids is not so full that there is danger of spilling while carrying.
Never exceed full dishes from which those at the table are to serve themselves.
Have the maid remain in the dining room as much as possible to see that glasses are never empty and that everyone is kept supplied with bread and butter.
When passing water, milk, cream etc., hands should never get around mouth of pitcher.

See that maid looks neat and that her hands and nails are clean.
The centerpiece for dinner table may be as elaborate as one wishes, the luncheon table centerpiece being more simple. Do not have flowers arranged in a tall vase unless the table is very large. It is most uncomfortable to be compelled to talk around a high vase of flowers.
The place cards lie on the napkin or are placed at the head of the plate.
The silver for all courses up to the dessert is placed on at the time of laying the table. The silver is laid in order of use, one always begins with the silver farthest from the service place.
Postal Receipts Increase.
Special to The World.
SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Aug. 2.—Postal receipts at the local post office for the month of July will be approximately $5,000 larger than for last year if the present rate of stamp sales to candidates continues, officials at the federal building said yesterday.

BOLL WEEVIL IS SILVER LINING

One Good Thing About the Heat Is That It Saves the Cotton

These torrid days aren't all misery after all. Every clover has its silver lining and the silver lining in this case is the boll weevil. For while an insistent continued temperature out of all range and reason may be hard on one's disposition and comfort it's harder yet on the boll weevil. A dead boll weevil means more cotton, more cotton means more money for the farmer and more money for the farmer means better times yet and better times yet means that Tulsa and its environs will revel in the most prosperity it has ever known. All of which air-castle is built upon the simple statement made by J. S. Malone, county farm agent, that this weather about which many cannot speak without undue emotion and soda water profanity, is the best thing in the world as a pest exterminator, especially with reference to the dreaded boll weevil. Cotton is coming fine and intensive cultivation coupled with the aid that the dry weather is giving augurs well for a good crop.

Other crops are similarly benefited by climatic conditions, especially corn. Corn promises to be the year's best crop pretty generally over the state, with the wheat acreage cut considerably and the quality and quantity considerably below normal. With a few more days of continued heat, the crucial time for cotton growing will have been passed and in some parts of the state a bumper crop is insured.
