WORKING TO THE SAME END.

The Evening Times has repeatedly stated that the policy of the political disruptionists in this state was to finally form a union with the democratic party...

defense of the disruptionists who fell into the pit in the now celebrated interview with Governor Sars.

That the democratic spokesman has a perfect right to defend the disruptionists is admitted. But that it should find it necessary to make a labored effort in this direction at a time when its allies have been driven from ambush...

Under these conditions it is not to be wondered at that men who had bourn the republican banner aloft on many a battlefield and who believed in its unyielding principles, refused to be led blindly into the democratic party...

The principles of the democratic party so far as they remain fixed sufficiently long to be remembered, are known to all men. And if an individual chooses to join that party knowing that he was doing so he would merely be exercising his sovereign right as an American citizen...

It is these methods which have aroused the republicans of the state to an understanding of the dangers which threaten the state and nation. It was an effort to gain control of the government under a subterfuge, and for this the republicans of this, a banner republican state, would not stand.

The frantic efforts of both the disruptionists and the democrats to still blind the facts and carry out the efforts of consolidation are visible in every utterance of the democratic press for what it chooses to call reform. Every one is an open endorsement of the hypocritical cry of its collaborators, the disruptionists.

THE OLD HOME MEMORIES.

An agricultural journal recently contained an article on the matter of the farmers of the west retiring to the cities and towns for the purpose of spending the autumn of life in ease and comfort. A portion of the article follows:

It is a surprising feature of farm life today, especially in the western states, to note the extent to which farmers are moving into the towns and cities with their families. In some instances they do so with a view of educating the latter. In others, simply because they have made enough money to keep them during the remainder of their days and therefore desire to take life easier than in the past.

Its occupants live in touch with nature. The drudgery if such it be termed, is sweetened by the sight of waving fields of grain, the low of cattle and the song of birds. The nearest approach to an every day paradise is the gathering of the family around the farm door steep in the fading light of a summer's evening.

Mr. Spalding has thus far failed to explain his vote for the wheat and the $600 mileage grab, to say nothing of those military claims. Well, Spalding has been kept busy telling the people how bad other men are, which no doubt accounts for his remissness in that regard.

The Herald's headlong plunge into the sea of sensationalism six months ago and its utter unreliability and lack of decency in dealing with public affairs have revealed the true inwardness of its editor's reform pretensions.

That man on the Crary Public Opinion wields a trenchant pen, and appears to experience no difficulty in sizing up the purposes of the insurgents.

The wheat raisers of the country, who approved Senator Hansbrough's efforts of the wheat duty, will applaud him for his amendment on grain inspection.

The Boy Who Keeps the Bats. Just see him stride from bench to plate. The boy who keeps the bats. With truly a majestic air he bars. His face unwashed, unkempt his hair. He's still in pride a millionaire.

Most important man in the town. The boy who keeps the bats. Possessed of great activity. He knows each player by his name. His age, his weight, from whence he came. And just how long he's played the game.

He'll tug ten sticks and laugh with glee. The boy who keeps the bats. "De fang" he'll cry with gleeful yell. The boy who keeps the bats. Although he's not employed for pay, He'll "take" inside to see 'em play. Which beats his former knot-hole way.

While this matter is the subject of discussion it may be apropos to state that The Evening Times editor has been a "hired man" much of the time during his nearly thirty years of newspaper work...

The St. Thomas Times, which in season and out of season never tires of asserting its stalwart republicanism, and in support of its vociferous claims is ever to be found on a still hunt for republican official patronage, stoutly maintains that its persistent opposition to Senator Hansbrough is not on account of lack of substantial reward...

The people of North Dakota are becoming aroused to the fact that a lot of disappointed office-seekers are trying to ride into political place on the backs of their support, and that they are the hullohaloo have been trying to raise against those in power is a bluff and a blind.

The principal of the Larimore high school, Miss McDonald, attended the conference at the university on the 18th and 19th. Miss McDonald is a graduate from the "U."

two two immaculate reformers, Lindstrom and Voigt, over in Benson county, goes a long way in support of the truth of the contention that when rogues fall out honest people invariably learn of many things that is of public interest.

srs. Spalding, Winship and Helegson at the behest of the machine (and they) might do well to exercise their foresight. Perhaps one or more of the gentlemen these editors are abusing may be in congress and dispenser of patronage, a year from now."

This timely warning is very kind of the Times-Record and the editor-postmaster should feel grateful and govern himself accordingly. It is certainly kind of Editor Nye, not only in giving the editors this tip, as to what they should do to protect themselves, but at the same time give them this tid-bit of inside political information for their gratification and edification, especially as these editors are ever on the alert for the very latest news from the inside circle.

This information coming from such a reliable source, removes the prevailing erroneous impression that these men--Spalding, Winship and Helegson--who are the head and front of the insurgent movement, were in no sense candidates for public positions in the gift of the people of North Dakota. It has been generally understood that it was their mission to purify the political situation and that they were industriously laboring for the good of the people and indifferent to political preferment.

The public is now disillusioned by this frank declaration, previously quoted, and the voters are to understand, inferentially, that one, or more of these gentlemen are in the field, valiantly fighting for delegations stepping lightly to the music of the good government league, bearing aloft brilliant banners, on which is inscribed, "I am a candidate for congress."
