A RING AND A PISTOL. A Veterinary Surgeon Prescribes for a Young Man and Unwillingly Fees His Patient.

A veterinary surgeon named Coffey and a young fellow by the name of Gus, Wirt had things their own way in Conn's drug store for a short time yesterday afternoon.

It seems that Wirt has some ailment and for reasons of his own confides in Mr. Coffey being too excited physician. Coffey's diamond ring was lying on a table in his office just before Wirt went in and after Wirt departed Coffey noticed that his ring was gone also.

The horse doctor followed his man patient up and finally collared him in Conn's drug store. After a few interesting words Coffey drew a pistol and as he is afflicted with St. Vitus-dance or palsy or something of the kind the revolver shook and pointed in every direction and Mr. Conn concluded he had business behind the prescription case.

Coffey ordered Wirt to go behind the counter, strip and hand him the clothes to be searched. About this time a customer, Mr. Daigetty stepped in but the animal curer ordered him out and the gentleman discovered that he didn't want to buy anything anyway. Mr. Daigetty, however, when he stepped into the street saw officer Thompson in citizen's clothes and the officer finding his service needed stepped into the store and took away the pistol. Not understanding the circumstance and Mr. Coffey being too excited to explain, the officer escorted Mr. Coffey to the police station. When the veterinary surgeon explained matters he was released and a search was begun for Wirt but he has not yet been apprehended.

Mr. Coffey said he knew Wirt took the ring and only exhibited the pistol to prevent the young fellow from assaulting him. The officers consider that the latter's flight after the trouble indicates guilt, but they do not expect to recover the ring.
