BURIED TREASURE

A Dream of Buried Treasure Comes True.

LETTER OF SUICIDE FOUND

Employee of Astorian Office Has Remarkable Psychic Powers Which He Uses to Good Advantage—Letter Tells of Treasure.

That dreams are not always mere vagaries of the mind, and having no significance, but that often subtle agencies, which are beyond the power of the living to fathom, work on the mind of the sleeper forewarning and foretelling of events and occurrences, is a fact often asserted, oftener denied, and seldom proved with any degree of authenticity. There are many tales, fantastic and otherwise, which are told of wonderful and seemingly impossible events, which have been sequent to dreams describing the occurrence as it is actually alleged to have occurred afterwards, but in nearly every case of this kind an investigation reveals some trace of its falsity, and in the end the supernatural becomes another of the commonplace events of life.

It is said that Solomon believed in dreams and the ancient kings of Babylonia kept soothsayers, who would interpret the fantasies of their somnolent hours. The present day, however, finds few persons who are willing to confess to their belief in dreams.

Dream Comes True.

An instance of where a dream, however, did come true in some degree occurred in Astoria last week, and because of its peculiar results, is here with given, and the reader can judge for himself as to the amount of truth embodied in it.

On Thursday night, March 26, 1906, J. O. Sutton, an employee of the Astorian office, dreamed that if he should go up on the hill south of the city in the neighborhood of the baseball grounds, he would find money buried in a certain spot. According to the dream the spot where the money was buried would be where two lines crossed; one line being formed by a telegraph pole and a tall dead tree, and the other by the flagstaff on the O. R. & N. dock and another dead tree.

This was the substance of the dream, and when he awoke so strong was he impressed with its reality that he related it to Charles Chislett and C. E. Ward, two other reputable employees of this office, and stated that he was going to test the truth of his dream by endeavoring to locate the spot.

Search For The Place.

On Friday afternoon, the day following the dream, Mr. Sutton, accompanied by the above-named gentlemen, walked to the baseball grounds, and after searching in the vicinity for a time Mr. Sutton located the telegraph pole, the dead tree, and the other marks of his dream. With these marks to guide them the place where the imaginary lines intersected was found.

The land at this point is cleared with the exception of a slight fringe of underbrush enclosing the spot. As soon as the place was found Mr. Sutton picked up a stick, and digging up the turf and excavating about six inches, he came upon a ten-cent piece; more digging brought to light another dime.

Not having anything to dig with further, the young men started home. They had walked about 100 yards northwest, and struck a trail, when Mr. Ward in a joking manner, stopped and said: "Boys, I have a hunch, too, that if I dig under that rock, I will find some money."

So saying, he walked to his left, and with a small stick he carried, prying over a small rock, which was imbedded in the earth. What was his surprise when he had moved the stone, to pick up two dimes and two nickels. The money was tarnished and showed evidences of long contact with mother earth.

Story Is Not Believed.

The three young men returned to the city, and related their experiences to the reporter, who refused to swallow any such "pipe dream," as he characterized it, and recommended Salem for the severe mental derangement with which his friends seemed to be afflicted. Ridicule, however, had no effect, in silencing the assertions of Messrs. Sutton, Chislett and Ward, and as they affirmed so stoutly the truth of what they had found the reporter Saturday afternoon accompanied them to the place. At the spot where Mr. Ward had made his find, the reporter dug down and managed to find another nickel. When the hole had been deepened to a foot, a bottle was found and in the bottle the following letter, which is perhaps the most remarkable of the entire proceeding:

Copy of Document.

Astoria, Jan. 14, 1904.

The finder of this document is lucky. I was always unlucky and I have decided to end my miserable existence; having so decided I have first taken the trouble to conceal all the money I have in my possession, you will find it there; follow these directions: Begin at this point and take one hundred steps in a southeasterly direction until you come to a point where two lines would cross if drawn from one extending over an old snag and a telegraph pole in a westerly direction, and the other extending over an old snag and the flag staff on the O. R. & N. dock. From this point take (—) paces straight toward the flag staff on the high school building there, and the reward is yours. To make sure that you are right you will find small coins buried with this paper, and at the points where the lines first mentioned cross. I was unlucky, you are lucky. Good bye. AXEL J. OLSON.

Follow the Directions.

By following the directions on the paper, the searchers brought up at the precise spot, where, in Mr. Sutton's dream, the money was.

By drawing a line from this place towards the high school building the direction of the treasure was ascertained.

Sunday another trip was made to the spot, and a dime and a nickel were dug up where the lines crossed, making a total of seventy cents found in both spots, thirty-five cents at each point.

This is all that has yet been brought to light, but it is the intention to at once begin a search of the ground in the vicinity, in an endeavor to discover the main treasure. All the details for finding the money buried here are not given as it is the desire of Mr. Sutton to first locate the treasure. Just who Axel J. Olson might have been, is not known, though diligent inquiries have been made to ascertain what has become of him. A number of bodies, which have never been identified have been found in this part of the country, and the probabilities are that Axel J. Olson was one of these.

To give an explanation of the phenomenon which caused Mr. Sutton to dream of money buried in this out of the way spot, and then to actually find money, is a mystery which the writer or any of those familiar with the circumstances will not try to solve.

SMALL POX SCARE

Three Well Defined Cases Now at Gray's River.

BROUGHT FROM THE FAR EAST

Careful Quarantine and Restrictive Measures Now in Force—May Break Out at Other Points. Authorities on Qui Vive.

There are three well developed cases of small pox at Gray's River, on the north shore opposite this city.

On Saturday morning last Dr. Pilkington of this city met a friend from Gray's River, who was accompanied by another citizen of that locality and whom he introduced to the doctor. The introduction had hardly transpired when Dr. Pilkington noticed certain impeccable signs of the dreaded disease on the face and hands of the stranger to whom he had just been introduced, and his professional instinct impelled him at once to advise the stricken man to leave the city and put himself under medical care and restriction without loss of time.

The man with the small pox, whose name is Peck, acted very promptly on the advice of the doctor and took the steamer Wenona for Deep river where he is employed as an engineer in the logging camp of Brix Brothers. He is not yet broken out with the malady but soon must be, though his infection is said to be of a light sort, and he will probably take refuge at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sorensen, of Gray's River which is the domicile of the three cases spoken of at the beginning of this story. Mr. Sorensen is down with the worst of the cases, since it is on the confluent type and very virulent. Her little grand-daughter, Hazel Badger is also afflicted lightly, and Elmer Meserve, manager of the Meserve logging outfits there, is also lightly stricken. The Sorensen home is now strictly quarantined and there is some talk of stopping the general traffic via the steamers Wenona and Shamrock, between Grays' and Deep Rivers, and this city. But this would not occur unless later developments warrant such action.

It seems the Peck family have but recently arrived from the east and brought the infection with them. Mrs. Peck but lately having recovered from a vicious attack of the disease, and she is now doing the housework in the stricken home of the Sorensens.

Dr. Pilkington went over to Gray's River on Saturday afternoon with Mr. Peck, and the latter took every precaution of keeping wholly to himself on the trip over the bay, and went into seclusion at the Sorensen home as soon as he arrived there: while Dr. Pilkington went out on a voyage of discovery for further signs of the dread malady.

He took a big lot of vaccine matter with him on the trip and used it right and left during his stay there, and gave a lot of useful advice and hints to those who wanted it, and he reports that everyone concerned in the matter is acting with perfect good faith and good sense, and there is not much danger of any definite spread of the trouble. And unless the association of Peck with his co-laborers in the Brix camps shall result in the breaking of one or more cases it is quite likely the cases under surveillance at the Sorensen place will mark the end of the invasion.

City Physician Mohn, of this city, was promptly apprised of the conditions, and in turn he notified the mayor and the committee on health and police of the common council, and a meeting of these officials was held at the city hall yesterday afternoon, and the city attorney was also called into the investigation. The whole matter and its bearings to this city were reviewed, and then it was suggested that Dr. Pilkington be called in. This was done and upon his advice being sought, he simply counselled awaiting further developments before there was any definite steps taken to stop the traffic or any other restrictive measures adopted, that might prove unnecessary. This was agreed to, and as he is in touch with the entire situation there, and will keep the city authorities fully and promptly informed as to the progress of events, the status of the affair may be safely left to his discoveries, and what they shall engender by way of precautionary measures such as quarantining the steamers and fishing boats and such other elements of rigid circumspection.

Sermons of Yesterday

Rev. G. E. Rydquist at the First Lutheran Church, preached on the subject "Liberty and Bondage," Sunday morning. He said in part:

"Liberty" is a word that passes over the lips of thousands, but whose minds never grasp its lofty ideal and ennobling principles. To the average mind there is no definite conception of the meaning of this word. To us as Christians and as a nation it ought to stand for something definite. Who would not rally to its defense? Whose heart does not throb in sympathy with those who struggle for liberty, whether it be religious or political? A Christian especially must be a friend to all forms of true liberty and its defender. As he was Christianized he was consecrated as such and with the mighty army of Christian hosts he partakes in the common struggle for greater liberty in his footsteps who gave his life for the liberation of man, from the clutches and the bondage of the most dreadful of tyrants.

"Liberty is not lawlessness, nor is it license. In the community or nation where liberty is thus disgraced selfishness sits on the throne and his servant is crime.

"The bondage of sin is the more dangerous, because the arch-deceiver makes it so fascinating and throws a cover of hallucinating light over the awful results to follow, and makes the slave feel that he is enjoying the most perfect liberty.

True Christianity is the same as true liberty. A community and a nation is not free unless it accepts the principles of Christianity, thus also with the individual. Tyranny and despotism reign where Christ and his teachings are not accepted, or accepted only in part.

"The ideals and principles of liberty are elevated in the same degree as the heart and mind are enlightened in the eternal truth and divine.

"Liberty elevates man, bondage degrades him; truth guides liberty in its course; falsehood deceives the slave."

A Dandy for Burns.

Dr. Bergin, Pana, Ill., writes: "I have used Ballard's Snow Liniment; always recommended it to my friends, as I am confident there is no better made. It is a dandy for burns. Those who live on farms are especially liable to many accidental cuts, burns, bruises, which heal rapidly when Ballard's Snow Liniment is applied. It should always be kept in the house for cases of emergency." 25c, 50c and $1.00. Sold by Hart's Drug Store.
