PORTLAND August 4.—The potato market is becoming quite active, and extra fine Early Rose and other varieties of first crop, together with the occasional lots of Burbanks that have matured, are moved readily. The local market is fairly well supplied.

A rather surprising feature of the Alaska potato trade in the extremely high freight rate to inland points. It is said by shippers to cost nearly $1000 to deliver a carload to those points. Starting here at a cost of, say, $300 a car, the freight costs more than triples the value on arrival at destination. This trade lasts until the middle of September.
