MITCHELL TRIAL 2 YEARS OLD

Prisoner Has Made Himself Handy in Jail And Is A Trusted Chef—Has Charge Of All Prison's Cooking And Keeps At His Law Reading.

OAKLAND, Cal., Aug. 27.—With two jurors in the box and ten more to select, the trial of Attorney David Mitchell will proceed tomorrow afternoon in Superior Judge Melvin's court. The task of empanelling a jury for this case is a long and difficult one. All day Thursday the attorneys for the defense and prosecution were able to pass on but two talemans out of the many that were examined.

Assistant District Attorney W. H. L. Hynes is conducting the examination of jurors for the prosecution, while the same proceeding is being done in Mitchell's behalf by Judge Frick.

The questions fired at the talemans tend to bring out any bias or prejudice that the men might have against the aged lawyer, because he is tried on the serious charge of attacking 14-year-old Evelyn Walker. Many of the peers say that they would be inclined to feel hard against a man who is said to have coaxed little girls into his office.

This is Mitchell's second trial on this offense. Nearly two years ago he was convicted by a jury in Judge Harris' court and sentenced to serve seven years in the penitentiary at San Quentin. On some thirty odd exceptions taken to the rulings of Judge Harris a new trial was granted by the Appellate Court a few months ago.

Judge Harris refused to allow in testimony the alleged coercion of the Walker girl into swearing to a complaint charging Mitchell with the crime. It is said that Charles P. Brown, a carpenter, now serving two and one-half years at San Quentin prison for forgery, and the father of Bernice Brown, now Mrs. Flynn, told the Walker girl that unless she charged the aged attorney with the crime of attacking her she would be sent to the reform school. His own daughter, Bernice Brown, was the one who took the Walker girl to Mitchell's office in the Blake & Moffitt block, on Broadway, where the alleged attack was said to have been made.

It was attempted by the defense in the former trial to show that the prosecuting witnesses had been girls of the street. This testimony was excluded by the court, who would not allow testimony concerning the characters of the girls. He also denied Mitchell the right to tell of the manner in which Brown had attempted an alleged blackmail.

Brown, Mitchell says, went to him and demanded money to keep him from waging a prosecution. Brown is said to have visited other prominent men in Oakland in attempts to blackmail. After Brown was in jail for forgery he confided in two fellow prisoners, Robert Bousefield and Ed Howard, that Mitchell should not be sent to jail. The forger said that had Mitchell come through with a little money, about $300, he would not have been prosecuted.

Mitchell will attempt to prove an alibi.

Since his stay in the county jail Mitchell has not forsaken his study of law. He had a large practice before he was arrested and held in jail in lieu of $10,000 bonds. To keep well versed in his profession Mitchell has kept his law library, or a portion of it at least, and spends much of his time in study.

Not only has Mitchell been studious in his law matters, but he has been chief chef of the jail. He is a very good cook and gives more appreciation than any prisoner ever before held in custody in the county jail. Chief Jailer White has a great deal of trust in Mitchell. The imprisoned attorney has in his charge long knives and kitchen utensils that would make excellent weapons for some of the desperate criminals, but he keeps them under lock and key, as he does all the stores, and Jailer White has no worry from this source.

If a man knows anything of his own anatomy he must be aware that his stomach is a magnificent organ and entitled to the utmost consideration; knowing that he will eat at the Palace when he can conserve its safety and comfort, by eating only the best cooked, best served and most compensating meal in the city of Astoria, day, or night, it is always the same, and the Palace habit is one that pays to acquire. Arthur Smith is a master of the art of preparation and service, of all things edible.

The Importance of Regular Habits

The welfare of the body depends upon how regularly the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels perform their respective duties. Carelessness or delay in attending to Nature's demands, brings on disorders which, sooner or later, have a bad effect on the general health. Sluggish bowels, inactive liver, retarded digestion are important matters calling for immediate attention.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

are a proven remedy. They possess corrective properties which act favorably upon the several organs and induce free and regular movements, so very essential to the bodily health. Do not fail to give instant attention to the calls of Nature. Neglect invites disease. Beecham's Pills are the old and reliable safeguard of health and can always be depended upon to

STORY OF DEATH CITY.

Various Routes Into the Klondyke Marked by the Graves of Those Who Went for Gold.

SEATTLE, August 27.—The intense interest created in everything pertaining to Alaska and Yukon by the advent of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, which will be held at Seattle in 1909, has caused old pioneers of the Northland to recall many stories and incidents of the stirring days of the rush of the gold seekers.

No tragedy of ancient or modern times of Amegeddon could be more horrible than the story of Death City and the brave band that built it as the terrible winter of 1897-98 was falling. It is a tale of a city that sprang up in a few hours, lasted a season and then was abandoned forever. The remains of this deserted city are situated near the camp headquarters of a tribe of Yukon Indians on the Mackenzie River in somewhat the same latitude as Dawson and Fairbanks.

When the news of the Klondike discovery reached the outside world, several hundred thousand men and several hundred women at once resolved to go to this land of gold. But at that time the best route to reach the country was a matter of fierce debate. The Nome, the Skaguay, the Dyea, the Wrangell, the Valdez, the Atlin, the Edmondston and the Prince Albert routes were fiercely championed by their respective supporters. And as a result thousands started in to the Yukon by what is now known as the terrible Prince Albert and Edmondston routes.

The summer of 1897 saw thousands start into the unknown. Many turned back, many died by the wayside and the remainder scurvy ridden, dirty, hungry, hoarse with that laughter that is worse than tears or hysterics, struggled along till winter began to fall. Most of them followed the Mackenzie, and before they started it was understood that they would meet for company's sake, to spend the winter at the highest point on the Mackenzie a traveler would touch, the point at which he turned westward to reach the Yukon. These party after party struggled in, frost bitten, starving and hopeless, and those who had arrived before and were somewhat rested built the cabins and tended them until their strength came slowly back.

But the food was scarce. The cold had driven the game away. The lack of fresh vegetables made the scurvy worse as the winter deepened. Day after day the steady ring of the picks on the frozen ground told that one more grave was being dug for some unfortunate resident of Death City who had given up the struggle.

When spring came only a few white limited, gaunt old looking, stooped and twisted men were left. Food and supplies were long since gone, and the dogs had all been eaten. But the lure of the gold still beckoned, and on they staggered day by day eating roots and occasionally managing to shoot some game or to snare a rabbit. They finally reached the gold land—only to find that the others who had gone by the Dyea and Skaguay routes had arrived months before and had staked all the good ground in the camp.

Some day, some survivor of Death City will write the story of that terrible winter, and will tell the dark stories that are only now whispered, of men turning old in a single week, of women refined and gentle who died by their own hand rather than live marked by the terrible scurvy, of heroic sacrifices and of panic stricken cowards whose breaches of discipline were suddenly ended by the crack of a rifle. And in the meantime the deserted tents and decaying cabins and the heaped mounds which cover the losers is all that remains of an experience that few occasions in this world's history have equaled.

Eight Hours A Day For Housewives.

"Exceptions aside, the average woman can do about as she wishes with the average man," says the editor in the September Woman's Home Companion in a strong editorial on President Roosevelt's recent speech to an assembly of farmers in Indiana.

"If the wives strike for eight hours they will win; a union composed of such powerful individual members and with a walking delegate so distinguished would overcome all obstacles. And what are the obstacles? Why is it that the woman of the house especially the woman on the farm, rises when the sun is ashamed to rise, and works long after the sun has sunk to rest? Is it the men? Are they such beasts that they require more of the women they promise to love and cherish than they do of themselves? In some cases yes; but in most cases the question never rises in the man's mind. He never saw his mother do anything but work, until she died or went crazy poor thing; and his wife—why, of course there are always little things to do around the house. Of course he has more help in his own business when it gets too big for him to handle, but he wouldn't think of giving his wife more help. Wouldn't he? Try and see. Perhaps, after all, women themselves are the chief obstacles in their own way to a square deal.

"And there are few wives who, if they went to their husbands and told them that their long hours were depriving them of their health and their right to enjoy life in its best sense—there are very few who would be refused the help that the circumstances required."

ECZEMA.

For the good of those suffering with eczema or other such trouble, I wish to say, my wife had something of that kind and after using the doctors' remedies for some time concluded to try Chamberlain's Salve, and it proved to be better than anything she had tried.
