PROGRESSIVES MEET

Indianapolis, Ind., July 21.—A complete state ticket is to be nominated at the Indiana Progressive state convention which convened this morning at 10 o'clock.

President electors were chosen at the meeting of delegates from the various districts in the state last night and electors at large are to be chosen before the convention closes.

The final decision to nominate a full state ticket was reached last night but not until after much opposition had been displayed.

While the state central committee was holding an executive session early this morning deciding on the program for the day, the "insurgents" held a separate meeting and organized the Progressive League for Indiana with William Dudley Foulke of Richmond, leading the temporary organization.

News that Albert J. Beveridge had endorsed Charles E. Hughes reached the state committee while it was perfecting its plans for the state convention.

Members of the committee said Mr. Beveridge's action would not in any way affect his position with respect to the party in Indiana.

In the absence of avowed candidates for state offices, no one would forecast the composition of the state ticket.

William D. Hedrick of Indianapolis the temporary chairman, extended his remarks into the keynote address. He also became the permanent chairman of the convention.

The platform contains planks on equal suffrage; free school books; anti-child labor laws; short ballot; constitutional convention; a budget system for the state and the initiative, referendum and recall.
