Every day at eight o'clock she hurries by the door. She smiles at me a moment as she passes--nothing more; But somehow things are brighter and are fairer than before.

I'm poor and lame, but when the sun is shining clear and bright They place me by the window in the morning's mellow light. And there I watch the people till the darkness comes with night.

God bless the ones who give a nod to cheer a weary day. God bless the girl who smiles at me, and hastens on her way-- A silent prayer to keep her safe is all that I can say.

EMIGRANTS' SCHOOL IN JAPAN. (Bulletin of the Japanese Society.) Dr. Inazo Nitobe, the author of "Bushido" and "The Japanese Nation," recently contributed an article to the Tokyo Advertiser, in which he points out that the Japanese people must get away from the insular spirit and adopt a more international viewpoint. Among other things, he says: "We are glad to hear of the establishment of an emigrants' school at Yokohama, which aims at giving proper knowledge to Japanese men and women going to America. We not infrequently hear our own countrymen speak of the Japanese immigrants in America with shame, hinting that they are a disgrace to the nation. Two years ago, following the eruption of Sakurajima, hundreds of the inhabitants proposed to migrate to other districts, but they were told to go away at almost every place where they wished to settle. A friend of mine, who is concerned in this matter, said: 'If they are rejected by their own countrymen, one can't blame the Americans for refusing to let such people in.'"

WOMEN OF MARLBOROUGH IS HELPING HOUSE ENGLAND'S MANY WORKING WOMEN

The Duchess of Marlborough.

London, Aug. 25.—The proper housing of England's thousands of working women, a class greatly increased since the war's beginning, has been a national difficulty whose demands have been largely met by the National Association for Women's Lodging Homes, an organization in which the Duchess of Marlborough is active. It was over three years ago that this association had its birth and its earlier work though valuable was in no way so important in the nation's life as today. Since the start of the war the influx of women into industry in England has been so great as to confront the ministry of munitions land, another for traffic from England to France. Some people seem to think a cross-channel tunnel might be a danger, because it might fall into the hands of the enemy. To capture the French end would not be an easy task. The mouth of the channel of Freshwater, which is ten miles from the coast, and in order to reach it the enemy would have to capture Calais, and negotiate three intervening hills of an average height of 150 feet.

FRANCE AND GREAT BRITAIN READY TO BUILD TUNNEL

"The tunnel on the French side would begin its journey under sea at Sangatte. In my belief it would be impossible for an enemy to reach the mouth of the tunnel and get at the electric plant. The motive power could be instantly suppressed and the tunnel immediately rendered useless by filling it with poisonous gas. One can hardly exaggerate the services the tunnel would have rendered to England and France had it been in existence when hostilities broke out. During the twenty hours' of daily use (for four hours must be deducted out of the twenty-four for an hour of rest) between 100 and 120 trains could have been sent in each direction.

"At 500 tons per train that represents 50,000 to 60,000 tons a day each way, much more than is necessary. Apart from the diminution in delay, risks, losses, and difficulties of every nature, the British fleet would have been liberated from one of the heaviest parts of its task and free to serve the cause of the Allies in other directions."

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Making Catsup. Making catsup is quite an art, but if directions are followed one need not fail. In getting tomatoes for catsup be sure they are of the red variety, solid-meated and thoroughly ripe. Defective and half-ripened vegetables are not dependable. Wash well and cut out all soft and unripe spots. Use an aluminum kettle, but falling that, a good enameled or porcelain-lined preserving kettle; never use iron or brass. Catsup must be made quickly; long cooking darkens the product. Use whole spices when ever possible, save, of course, cayenne, which should be added at the end.

It is not necessary to remove the skins. Put in a kettle without water and boil until thoroughly soft. Mash through a fine sieve, wash well and skins remain. To each gallon of this liquid add three level tablespoonfuls of salt and one-quarter tablespoonful of red and white pepper. Place in the kettle and suspend in it a little fannel bag containing for each gallon two level tablespoonfuls of whole allspice, four level tablespoonfuls of unground celery seed, one ounce of stick cinnamon, three ounces of green ginger root that has been cleaned and scraped. Now drop in two large whole onions, broken in a sieve, until only seeds to prevent scorching, and boil until the mixture begins to thicken. Add one pint of vinegar and three level tablespoonfuls of sugar. Continue boiling until the mixture becomes so thick that when a teaspoonful is removed and placed in a saucer no water will run from it. Remove the onions and spice bag, put the catsup in jars or bottles, sterilized in boiling water, and seal or cork while hot. If kept corked catsup made by this recipe will keep indefinitely.

Red Tomato Preserves. Peel the tomatoes and cut out the stem end. Remove as many of the seeds as possible, saving the seeds and juice to use in chili sauce. Wash the meaty part of the tomatoes to remove all seeds and drain thoroughly. Take a pint of sugar to each pint of tomatoes. Put the sugar on the stove with just enough water to dissolve it. When the syrup is almost candies drop in the tomatoes. Add as much sliced lemon as desired. Cook all together until the fruit is clear and well done. A half-bushel of tomatoes that are not very juicy will make twelve pints of preserves.

Hodge Podge Pickles. One dozen cucumbers, sliced thinly; one gallon shredded cabbage, four onions, three teaspoonfuls salt, two cupfuls white sugar, four red peppers, one-half pound dry mustard, one ounce celery seed, one ounce white and black mustard seed. Add enough vinegar to mix thoroughly, and let come to boiling point. Stir in mustard, which has been mixed with cold vinegar. Boil twenty minutes; seal in jars while hot. Excellent to serve with meats.

Fig Apple Jelly. Pare five apples, core and slice into a pan with one and one-half cupfuls of water. Chop six figs and add to the apples, cover and cook five minutes. Add one and one-half cupfuls of sugar and cook until apples are soft, stirring occasionally. Remove from fire and stir in two tablespoonfuls gelatine which has been soaked a few minutes in one cup cold water. Stir well and pour into mould and set away to harden.

WOULD OVERRUN GERMANY. (London Mail.) The war cannot end soon, Prussian ambition can never be broken on French or Russian soil. Unless the allies can invade Prussia (and Bavaria) far and wide, and dictate peace on Prussian soil, all the great sacrifices that have been made, all the valor of the allied troops, will have been in vain.

What are we fighting for? There have been many definitions of our aim, but what we are really fighting for is to prevent an arrogant and malignant race from ever again aspiring to the mastery of the world. We are fighting to deprive Prussia of the power of ever again setting the world in flames. A peace signed on French soil, or a peace signed on the Rhine and the lower Vistula would mean that we should have to fight again in ten years. They would have ravaged far and wide and kept their own land almost inviolate. They would not know that they were beaten. A man who has just returned from Germany said this: "The German government have kept the horrors of the war from German soil, and in that fact lies their greater strength." I do not know who the man was, but he spoke a true word. We can never regard this war as won, nor hope to look upon a world set free, unless the avenging sword of the allies is thrust far into the heart of the German empire. That must be our aim. Nothing less will suffice to rid civilization of this cancerous growth. We must do it, even though we have to leave to those who came after us the task of building a new Europe out of the wreckage of the old.

PETERSON IS BACK. Claims Crop Conditions Are Much Better Than Was Expected. F. S. Peterson, second vice president of the Scandinavian-American bank of this city, has returned from points along the Sarles branch of the Great Northern and declares that crop conditions in that section of the state are proving much better than was expected. At Hampden and Edmore the threshing operations are well under way and yields from 8 to 16 bushels per acre are being obtained.

To Help Him Out. "You are being so clumsy," said the observant judge to a litigant who was making a dubious statement in a case. "That I would advise you to get a lawyer."
