FROM RIBBONS AND BEADS. Dainty Necklets That May Be Made at Home Just the Thing for Simple Elegance.

Dainty necklets fashioned from ribbons and beads can be made at home easily. For the simple blouse or frock of today they are exactly what is needed. Many women have odd lengths of narrow ribbon laid by, remnants secured at the last sale. Anything in ribbons, velvet or moire from one to three yards will come in useful.

Pearl drops can be bought for five or ten cents. The expense of the necklaces may be obtained by the use of imperfect trinkets, such as a pair of earrings or an old cameo. A simple form of necklet is a green velvet one with amber drop. It is merely a length of half-inch-wide velvet ribbon, 40 inches long, turned back at each end to form a point. To each of these points is fastened a long, narrow yellow drop, cut into a graceful tassel. The ribbon is flung around the neck of the wearer and knotted loosely in front.

For Lingerie Ribbon. Quaint little doll figures may be cut out of cardboard, painted and wrapped with ribbon for a simple gift. A bodkin is placed in the ribbon and this practical roll is ready for work. These little cardboard dolls may be painted with colors from a child's paint box.

Some of the new lace blouses show underbodies of pale violet crepe or silk. These are especially attractive for wear with a suit in some shade of purple or plum.

Three-cornered Debate on Question Held at Atlantic City.

Atlantic City, N. J., Sept. 6.—A debate on the question of whether the National American Woman Suffrage association should drop its work for state amendments and concentrate its efforts on the federal amendment, was a feature of the opening session of the association's annual convention here today.

Mrs. Ida Husted Harper of New York, as leader of the "Federal Amendment" forces argued in the affirmative, while Miss Laura Clay of Lexington, Ky., argued in favor of confining the right to individual states; a third debater, Mrs. Raymond Brown of New York, took a middle ground in favor of both federal and state work.

Mrs. Harper declared that the association should concentrate on the Susan B. Anthony federal amendment, and that the individual state work be discontinued.

"We have now obtained enough enough suffrage states to make our measure a national political issue," Mrs. Harper declared, "and to force its endorsement by the platform of all five of the parties; to persuade a presidential candidate to declare for the federal amendment through state action? Because they knew they were putting it off till doomsday. They understood perfectly that in fully one-third of the states where women are still disenfranchised the constitutions are so framed that amendment is practically impossible. Let us amend no more of these states. Let us with their killing work, their personal humiliations, their fraudulent votes, and their stuffed ballot boxes."

Mrs. Harper named as opponents "the corporations, the liquor and other vice interests."

"We have had enough of appealing to the individual voter with his secret ballot," Mrs. Harper added, alluding to the state fight. "We demand a fight for the open ballot, we may recognize our foe and the influence behind them. Why were both republican and democratic conventions willing to favor women's suffrage through state action? Because they knew they were putting it off till doomsday. They understood perfectly that in fully one-third of the states where women are still disenfranchised the constitutions are so framed that amendment is practically impossible. Let us amend no more of these states. Let us with their killing work, their personal humiliations, their fraudulent votes, and their stuffed ballot boxes."

Must Continue Both Commonwealth and National Battles, Says One.

Atlantic City, N. J., Sept. 6.—If the suffragists are to win their fight for women in this country, both the federal and state campaigns must continue unabated, in accordance with the federal policy, declared Mrs. Raymond Brown, of New York, in an address here today at the opening session of the National American Woman Suffrage association.

Mrs. Brown defended the association's policy in a three-cornered debate in which her opponents were Miss Laura Clay of Lexington, Ky., and Mrs. Ida Husted Harper of New York, leader of the "Federal Amendment" forces.

Describing equal suffrage as "the liveliest political issue before the public," Mrs. Brown alluded to the state campaigns which have been fought and won, resulting in a growing number of men being elected to congress by the vote of women.

"When the last group of states was won in 1913 and 1914 the federal amendment came into the immediate foreground," Mrs. Brown continued, "and there is no doubt it is going to be passed before many years. When it has been passed we must go on working for the federal amendment. It is not enough to howl the fight has only just begun. Not a woman will be enfranchised until it is ratified by three-fourths of all the states. It means that it is of the utmost importance to strengthen our state organizations. Of course we must go on working as hard as ever for the federal amendment, but at the same time we must try to win new states and to prepare the states for ratification. We must go on working for the separate states, building up state organizations, and we must win more suffrage states."

Mrs. Brown held that in building up state organizations, working in congressional districts was not sufficient. "An organization by congressional districts is necessary to get the amendment through congress," she said, "but for either a state referendum or ratification of a federal amendment by a state legislature, it is insufficient. There is too little local appeal. Such an organization engages only a few women, the great rank and file of suffragists are not intimately concerned. To get a state legislature ready to ratify the national amendment, we must go on working to convert every possible state legislator, and that needs an organization in every assembly district which in strong reality means a county organization. If, even after the amendment has passed congress, other states should be won for suffrage, we would give our support to the ratification of those states."

The national association, having introduced the federal amendment, should stand behind it and never cease working for it, Mrs. Brown declared, adding:

"Meanwhile the association must go on working in state campaigns where, according to its best judgment, the situation is most promising, and continue to help the different states build up their state organizations to the greatest possible efficiency. It must continue to work through both state and national legislation until the federal amendment has been ratified by three-fourths of all the states."

Miss Laura Clay Says Campaign Ought to go on in Each State.

Atlantic City, N. J., Sept. 6.—The constitutional amendment which Susan B. Anthony proposed, which would enfranchise all the women in the country, is "by no means necessary to the success" of the cause of equal suffrage, but the campaign ought rather to be conducted in the individual states, Miss Laura Clay, of Lexington, Ky., today told the National American Woman Suffrage association, in convention here today.

"State Rights" forces in a three-cornered debate in which her opponents were Mrs. Raymond Brown, of New York, who advocated continuation of the association's present policy of campaigning for both federal and state legislation, and Mrs. Ida Husted Harper of New York, who urged that the state campaigns be abandoned in favor of concentrating the fight solely on the Susan B. Anthony amendment.
