"The Chosen Memory."
The riches or high place I fall
To reach along life's way.
Or my renown display,
Tho' others quickly me outrun
By right of skill and zest,
Yet I would ask this final word—
He tried to do his best.
The thrills of such wealth my heart
Will never know, I'm sure,
The wild acclaim the victor stirs
No flush from me secure;
But where men do the common things
That comfort the oppressed,
I'd have this memory remain—
He tried to do his best.
—Will Chamberlain.

It may have been that dental operations were terrible and terrifying ordeals in the days of our grandfathers, although they probably had no other experience with dentists than having their teeth pulled with a turnkey. At the present time no one needs fear pain at the hands of the expert dentist if he employ him in time. It is only by neglect that the teeth and mouth get into conditions which any severe pain occurs in operations on them.—Adv.

THE DEAD LOON.
There is a dead loon in the camp tonight killed by a clever fool.
And down the lake a live loon calling.
The wind comes stealing, tall, muscullar and cool.
From his plunge where stars are falling.

The wind comes creeping, stalking,
On its night ridden trail,
Up to the cabin where we sit playing cards and talking,
And only I, of them all, listen and grow pale.

He glues his face to the window, adores dressing only me;
Talks to me of death, and bids me hark
To the hollow scream of a loon, and bids me see
The face of a clever fool reflected in the dark.

That loon is farther on the way than we are
It has no voice with which to answer while we wait.
But it is with me, and with the evening,
Its voice is my voice, and its fate my fate.
