THIS UNUSUAL PRIMA DONNA SCRUBS FLOORS AND GOES ALONE TO MARKET

Madame Miriam Ardini.

New York, Oct. 16.—(Special.)—Whether or not there be so rare a thing as a prima donna without temperament, Madame Miriam Ardini, operatic soprano, does not pretend to be one. But she does insist on the privilege of expressing her temperament in the manner that pleases her. And so instead of tearing her hair and having tantrums, the methods in highest favor among prima donnas, she scrubs the kitchen floor and goes to market alone.

Since her young girlhood Madame Ardini has loved the chores of the housewife. She loves to cook and barter for vegetables. And as she has never found that these things impair her voice she has continued them. "On the contrary, I find that work about the house is a refining diversion after a day of music. Everyone knows the rest and repose to be had in a new train of thought after one has been working hard in some other direction and I have found that my love of housework has helped me greatly." Madame Ardini is not only the possessor of an unusual voice, but she has shown talent in piano composition as well. Though her name has a continental flavor, she was born and bred in New York city. Bond of the Metropolitan Opera company, was the first to hear her and to give her encouragement. She determined to study for the operatic stage and under the direction of William S. Brady and Maestro Guagni she advanced rapidly. She soon left for several years' study abroad.

Upon her return to America Madame Ardini amazed her friends with the advance in her singing, but also in the culinary wonders she had learned to perform. And she was as proud of her work in the kitchen as the work she did on the stage. She is soon to make her first appearance on the New York operatic stage and after a short season will create the leading soprano role in a new opera.

MME. BERNHARDT, IN AMERICA ON FAREWELL TOUR, RETAINS YOUTH

Mme. Bernhardt, photographed since her arrival in the United States.

New York, Oct. 17.—The immortal Sarah Bernhardt, well past seventy, has arrived in New York and quieted all fears that her operation of last year may have ended her career. Aside from statistical reports that she has parted with a leg, there is no outward evidence of impaired health or vivacity to bear out that suspicion. There is no hint of suffering in the clear eyes and the face is absolutely unlined. She has even discarded the extremely high collar which used to defend her throat from prying eyes.

To be sure, when she exchanged greetings with friends and admirers at her hotel shortly after her arrival, she did not walk. She rose and sat down with apparent ease. She chatted incessantly with a constant stream of visitors and passed from grave to gay as though her heart were not torn with anxiety for her brave soldiers.

She will not repeat "Les Cathedrales," the epic of the ruined cathedrales, here because it has no background, but when she opens in New York the last week in November Mme. Bernhardt will give sketches and scenes from the favorites of her repertoire—"La Mort de Cleopatre," "Jeanne d'Arc," "L'Aiglon," "La Vittraille," "La Dame aux Camellias," "Une d'Elles" and "Adrienne Lecouvreur." In "Le Faux Modelé" she has some English lines.

But "Le Marchand de Venise," with her Shylock, will give the real thrill of novelty to her audiences.

Mme. Bernhardt will spend six months in this country and six weeks of it in New York.
