CONSCRIPTION IN CANADA IF FOUND WEEDED

Will be Applied If Found the Only Method, Says the Premier.

Ottawa, Ont., Dec. 28.—In a letter today to organized labor, Premier Borden said that "The proposal for national service is not connected with conscription, but rather the idea was to make an appeal for voluntary national service which would render unnecessary any resort to conscription. He declined to give assurance that under no circumstances would conscription be carried out in Canada, asserting:

"If conscription should prove the only effective method to preserve the existence of the state, I should consider it necessary and should not hesitate to act accordingly."

He declared: "The government has already acted on this principle. Any further proposals in that regard must be submitted to parliament."

Taking Wealth. R. B. Bennett, director of the national service, has announced that it is obligatory upon every man in Canada to fill in and return a card giving his age and social status and answering other questions.

The executive committee of the Canadian National Service League has decided that in view of the assurances that "No penalty or coercion will be applied," members of all units are recommended to fill in and return the cards.

History Study to Be Given Boost by National Society. Cincinnati, Ohio, Dec. 28.—Students from secondary schools are deficient in their knowledge of history, according to a report of the National Society, a conference in connection with the American Historical Association in session here.

Representatives from leading universities in America formulated an organization to be known as the university for higher studies, in Washington.

According to the "provisions of the constitution," the university is to be a center of study for students in North and South America will be provided where access to the large resources of the National Society in the archives, museums, and libraries of the government may be available.

RECEIVER FOR POWER CO. Friendly Action for Reorganization of $5,000,000 Concern in Montana, Idaho and Washington.

Spokane, Wash., Dec. 28.—By agreement of the company and its creditors, the Northern Idaho and Montana Power company, a $5,000,000 corporation, operating public utilities in 35 cities and towns in Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon, will be reorganized under the supervision of a receiver.

The application for appointment of the receiver was made before Judge Rudkin here by Matthew A. Morrison and E. H. Green, who are receivers for the company.

The trustees under the mortgage bond and the Oregon Power company, which had to be liquidated, are the parent company, also were made defendants to the suit.

In answering the complaint, the Northern Idaho and Montana Power company joined in the petition for the appointment of a receiver.

Guilty Verdict Set Aside by the Higher Tribunal. Salem, Ore., Dec. 28.—On the ground that objections to the judgment had been erroneous the Oregon supreme court today set aside the verdict against William Branson and Mrs. Anna Booth, convicted and fined in Yamhill county on charges of having slain the woman's husband, William Booth, October 8, 1915.

Both were described by the bank of a river and after the tragedy witnesses testified they had seen Branson and Mrs. Booth in that vicinity. The theory of the prosecution was that Booth discovered a two at a clandestine meeting and that Branson killed Booth.

THE REAL ADVENTURE

THE BEST STORY OF THE YEAR—A NOVEL THAT WILL INTEREST EVERY READER OF THE HERALD

By Henry Kitchell Webster

(Copyright, 1916, by The Robbs-Merrill Co.) CHAPTER III. Where Did Rose Come In?

However, it was one thing to decide that this was so, and quite another thing to admit the preposterous idea of her mind. There was still an hour before she need begin dressing for the Randolph dinner; but as she had already had her tea and there was nothing else to do, she thought she might as well go about it. It might help her resist a certain perfectly irrational depression which the talk with the actress, somewhat surprisingly, had produced. And besides, if she were all dressed when Rodney came home, she'd be free to visit with him while he dressed to and watch him swearing at his plans, and tell him about the events of her day. And he'd come over every now and then and interrupt himself with a kiss and a word of unexpected caress—a kiss on the back of her neck, or an embrace that would threaten her composure; and this, she felt, would be a relief.

She wanted to know what he meant by "I've no idea," he said. "Ten-twelve—two. I've got to get hold of something, but I've no idea how long it will take." "But Rodney, dearest," she protested, "you have got to come home. You've got the Randolphs' dinner."

"Oh, the devil!" he said. "I forgot all about it. But it doesn't make a bit of difference anyway. I wouldn't leave the office before I have finished this job for anybody short of the Angel Gabriel." "But what shall we do?" she asked despairingly.

"I don't know," said Rodney. "Call them up and tell them. Randolph will understand." "But—it was absurd that her eyes should be filling up and her throat getting lumpy over a thing like this—all about it. But it doesn't make a bit of difference. Anyway, I wouldn't leave the office before I have finished this job for anybody short of the Angel Gabriel." "But what shall we do?" she asked despairingly.

"I don't know," said Rodney. "Call them up and tell them. Randolph will understand." "But—it was absurd that her eyes should be filling up and her throat getting lumpy over a thing like this—all about it. But it doesn't make a bit of difference. Anyway, I wouldn't leave the office before I have finished this job for anybody short of the Angel Gabriel." "But what shall we do?" she asked despairingly.

His glare of annoyance changed to bewilderment at the sight of her, and he said: "Rose! Has anything happened? What's the matter?" And, catching her by the arm, he led her into the office. "Here, sit down and get your breath and tell me about it!" She smiled and took his face in both her hands. "But it's the other way," she said. "There's nothing the matter with me. I came down, you poor old boy, to see what was the matter with you."

He frowned and took her hands away and stepped back out of her reach. Had it not been for the sheer incredulity of it, she'd have thought that her touch was actually distasteful to him.

"Oh," he said. "I thought I told you the phone there was nothing the matter?—Won't you be awfully late to the Randolphs?" "I had ten minutes," she said, "and I thought . . . She broke off the sentence when she saw him snap out his watch and look at it. "Easy there's something," she said. "I can tell just by the way your eyes look and the way you're so tight and strained. If you'd just tell me about it, and then sit down and let me try to take the strain away. . . ."

Beyond a doubt the strain was there. The glow he meant for a good-humored dismissal of his fears didn't sound at all as it was intended to. "Good heavens!" he said. "There's nothing to tell! I've got an argument before the court of appeals tomorrow and there's a ruling decision against me. It's against me, and it's bad law. But that isn't what I want to tell them. I want some way of making a distinction so that I can hold that the decision doesn't rule against me. And it wouldn't help," she ventured. "If you told me all about it? I don't care about the dinner."

"I can't explain in a month," he said. "Oh, I wish I were some good!" she said forlornly. He pulled out his watch again and began pacing up and down the room. "But that's just what I want to tell you," she broke out again. "If you'll only sit down for five minutes and let me try to get that strained look out of your eyes. . . ."

"Good Lord, Rose!" he shouted. "Can't you take my word for it and let it alone? I'm not ill, nor frightened, nor broken-hearted. I don't need to be comforted nor encouraged. I'm in an intellectual quandry. For the next three hours, or six, or however long it takes, I want my mind to run cold and smooth. I've got to be tight and drained. That's the way the job's done. You can't solve an intellectual problem by having your hand held, or your eyes kissed, or anything like that. Now, for the love of heaven, child, run along and let me forget you ever existed, for a while!"

And he ground his teeth over an impulse that all but got the better of him, after that. He tried to get up, but he found her hand on his arm, and he pulled her up into the corridor and pulled her up in his arms and kiss her face all over, and to console the law and the prophets both, to the devil.

This absorbing story will be continued in tomorrow's issue of The Herald.

Ambitious Mouse Climbs and Climbs to Fatal End. Merchantville, N. J., Dec. 8.—A harmless little mouse came near creating a sensation at one of the church services. The mouse started to roam around the auditorium and found himself surrounded by beautiful scenery in the midst of which he soon discovered a neatly booted foot belonging to one of the young women of the congregation. Without moment's hesitation he started to climb. The owner of the boot grabbed the mouse in the middle of his journey, getting a strange hold. She exerted so much pressure that the creature fell to the floor dead. An obliging usher removed the carcass.
