shooting matches, foot races, horse races, etc. The great foot race was that in which he ran eleven miles in fifty-eight minutes. The old gentleman is now 96 years of age, and points with pride to the fact that he is the father of seventy children, while he privately declares that there are some ten or twelve more whose names are not on the records. All the children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren resemble their able progenitor, and the old man of 96 is proud of the fact. He is still nimble of foot, can shoot as well as ever, has every faculty in full play, is in no way diseased, and has never been under a doctor's care. He has not been ill since he was 82 years of age, and his only ambition is to live until he is 100 years old and die where he was born. None of Adkin's children inherited his peculiar notions as to the marriage relation, which is the head of the family considered a great weakness.
