The Wine Crop.

The false and pernicious report set forth in yesterday's Times, that there were "2,000,000 gallons of wine in this county, and the trade was very light," created disgust and indignation among the wine manufacturers of Los Angeles county. On inquiry of the largest manufacturers of wine in the county, we find that there are not over 100,000 gallons of wine on the market in this county, and not a million gallons in the whole State. This is from men who know, and not from men who know nothing about the matter, but are diligently engaged in trying to ruin everybody in the wine business without facilities for making wine.

As the Herald stated yesterday, the wine trade is steady, and the stock is very light. The market was never in better condition than it is to-day. The market is extending all the time, the quality is improving continually, and the makers are satisfied with the present outlook of affairs, and willing to pay good prices to our farmers for their grapes. The wine makers are indignant at that journal for attempting to set a price on the grapes which they shall pay for them if they can afford to do so grapes this fall, without having a prohibition organ prescribe to them the price which they shall pay for their stock. They might as well tell the merchant what he shall pay for his goods, or the manufacturer what he shall give for wool and cotton. These things regulate themselves, without the aid and advice of outsiders. If a prohibition organ attempts to make the price of grapes 40 per cent below last year, in order to break up the business of grape growing, the grape grower has an equal right to dictate a reduction of 40 per cent in the price of subscription, and advertising in the columns of our contemporary.

Our contemporary attempts to belittle by its false and foolish statement by a citation published long ago in these columns, from Mr. L. J. Rose, against planting wine grapes so rapidly. But since that caution was published, the vinifera has raised millions of vines in France, Italy and Spain, so that the exportation of wine from those countries has greatly diminished, making a large opening for an increased product of American wine and brandy. Besides, our wine dealers give as a result of their experience, that the trade in California wines is growing all the time. That is the report of Messrs. E. Martin & Co., Keller & Co., M. Levy & Co., Messager & Co., H. J. Woolson and others in the special telegrams to California wines. A very significant fact is given by Mr. Woolson: While two years ago he sold three cases of imported port wine to one of California manufacturers, he now sells twenty cases of California to one of the imported articles. The prohibition organ says: "The following organ potatoes were so cheap that they would not pay for digging, sacking and freight, and the fact was well known, or as good as it is now, there were no interior markets accessible by railway, and foreign wines were more plentiful and pure than now. Since that period all the circumstances have changed. There is no concealment on the part of the Herald, but a plain statement of facts, and the facts clearly indicate that the Times' statement is false in every particular.

Mr. L. J. Rose assures us that there are not 100,000 gallons of wine in the State, ready for market, and that the statement of the Times that there were 2,000,000 gallons now in this county is a wild statement. He furthermore says that there are not 2,000,000 gallons in the whole State of marketable wine. The Times appears as a bear in the grape market four months before grapes are in for wine-making. May I discover that it has been a little too previous in its statement of the year ahead before the new crop of wine will be fit for market, and in that time but little will be left unsold of good California wines. The demand increases every day. Our pure wines are finding their way into the various wholesale and retail medicine houses of the country from Los Angeles to Astorook in Maine, and give unequalled satisfaction. The Napa reporter says: Mr. F. Pohndorf, of St. Helena, who is an expert in wine-making, and has an European experience, gives it as his judgment that the manufacture of California wine is improving their quality. The wines of to-day are not the crude, vinegary, over-alcoholized products of a few years ago, but through expert handling, blending and attention to the variety of grapes from which they are made, are assuming a shape and quality that must eventually give them a rank with similar pure imported wines. Mr. Pohndorf, in reference to the character of native wines from the vineyards and cellars of California, comes to the conclusion that our best products will soon sing their own praises. He says: "There are excellent lots in our midst who have entered into the grape-growing industry in the right spirit; experience has convinced them that safety against the necessity for asserting their product—pride of the quality of the latter is awakening the vigor. High class varieties of the vines are coming into the country from abroad, and their cultivation is being eagerly adopted and multiplied. Facts have already proved that this is the right way to go to work, and when we shall have the character of native wines, the next step will be taken naturally to establish nurseries locally. California will be the center of the grape and wine industry, and results can then be waited for with patience. Discussions of possibilities or the reverse will then be needless. Nurseries and cellars, modest as their extension in the aggregate will remain, even if the planting boom will be kept up at a higher rate than at present, will hold their own in the near future, and varieties of wine will be seen to which a justifiable pride from any country must render justice. If in planting for quality they equal thought given to raising light, equal ordinary wine, moderate, or better, lower prices, in order to let them be accessible to every American, the industry will undoubtedly prosper."

Pohndorf's statement is a most excellent revelation, if any were needed, of the false statements of our misguided contemporary.
