All diseases of the respiratory organs treated by the most improved medicated inhalations, combined with proper constitutional remedies for the liver, stomach, blood, etc.

CATARRH.

The term Catarrh is applied to a peculiar disorder of the nostrils and adjacent parts which prevails to an alarming extent, and is productive of very serious consequences.

In some there is an almost constant flow of clear, acid fluid, but often an offensive, purulent or mucopurulent, greenish yellow matter is secreted, which accumulates in the nostrils or drops into the throat, necessitating frequent removal by blowing the nose or expectoration, and often by both processes.

Again, the offensive matter hardens and deposits itself on the membrane in the shape of dry, hard concretions, which are discharged by the way of the nostrils or throat in lumps or fragments of a deep green color. In some cases these concretions accumulate to such an extent as to form a regular plug in the nose, which obstructs breathing and produces serious discomfort.

The disease is generally of a chronic nature, and in some cases it becomes hereditary, and is often transmitted to the offspring.

The voice is thick, indistinct and husky, or of a nasal character, displaying a sort of sniffling quality. Oftentimes there is a continuous hoarseness and discordance. There is also a sense of irritation in the throat, and frequent attempts to clear the parts of phlegm, producing the sound "hem" more or less forcibly.

The mucous membrane soon becomes morbidly sensitive to unfavorable influences, and, in spite of the utmost care, becomes the seat of the most distressing affections, so that at last a breath of wind upon the lining of the nose or throat becomes productive of a cold, and gives rise to serious disturbances of the respiratory organs.

The stomach generally suffers more or less and becomes weak and irritable; the appetite is capricious and nearly always bad in the morning. The patient is languid, unable to perform mental or physical labor with the usual facility, is nervous, depressed in spirits, at times fearful, timid, agitated, and inclined to drowsiness and sleep; the memory weakened, and permanent impairment seriously threatened.

The mucous membrane soon becomes morbidly sensitive to unfavorable influences, and, in spite of the utmost care, becomes the seat of the most distressing affections, so that at last a breath of wind upon the lining of the nose or throat becomes productive of a cold, and gives rise to serious disturbances of the respiratory organs.

Persons desiring treatment by this system of practice can use the remedy at home as well as at our office, and which will cause no inconvenience or hindrance to business whatever.

I have seen so many of these cases cured that I do not consider any case hopeless unless both lungs are seriously involved. Even then the inhalations aid us in dissolving the mucous membrane, and in healing the cavity, which nothing else can do with the same success. The very best references from those already cured.

CONSULTATION FREE.—Those who desire to consult with me in regard to their cases had better call at the office for consultation and examination, or, if it is impossible to do so, can write for a copy of my Medical Treatise, containing a list of questions Address
