BRO. BOUCK has been studying and writing up Los Angeles and the region round about. He says that any one who thinks this people are made up of one-lungers, gets passed by. On the contrary, their lung power is prodigious and their grip terrific. He proposes to acquaint the people in the upper part of the state with the facts he has discovered, and to advise them that they have many things to learn from us in the way of united and persistent work.

AFTER today every defendant in a civil suit must have a copy of the complaint, as well as the summons, served upon him. Hitherto one in each county was the only requirement—all other defendants being served with copy of summons only. The new law makes an entirely unnecessary and vexatious change. In many suits, like those to quiet title, for instance, where there may be scores of nominal defendants, the new requirement will cause excessive annoyance and expense.

ALL accounts agree as to the show at Chicago, upon two points. First, that there is now, and will continue to be, plenty of room for the vast numbers who will go, and second, that the show itself will be immense. The fear that strangers could not get reasonable accommodations, at reasonable rates, is fast being dispelled. We have it upon the best possible authority, that right upon the line of entrance to the grounds, or close enough thereto to quit the convenience of most of the people, there are very satisfactory hotels that give lodgings for from one to two dollars a day. As a matter of fact, one gentleman writes that the prices are entirely fair, considering that these hotels are put up so do only a temporary business. We are glad to be able to believe and state this, for at the opening things looked badly for the multitude that wanted to see this greatest of all the great fairs—as undoubtedly this is to be, when fairly and fully inaugurated.

It is not what we think of ourselves out what others think of us which makes or mars us. All of us are inclined to boast of our own—especially we dwellers in new places of which we are fond. It is rare to find a really promising western town "through whose center the axis of the earth does not protrude visibly," as Dr. Holmes declared twenty-five years ago, when defending Boston against the critics who assailed her well known local pride. But there is a limit to local pride. It is, in fact, easy to descend from this into provincialism, which no one can defend. Now, the whole country has begun to think so well of Los Angeles that she can afford to be composed and complacent. Above all she can afford to wait for one or more new railroads that are bound to come at the right time. No matter if we can't swear to the exact date when the Salt Lake road will be built, we know it is coming, for the rest of the country has agreed that we deserve it. Let us keep our heads and our hopes, for we have now the good opinion of the whole country as to our future.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA LEADS.
The condition of affairs at the world's fair, as reported to us by private advices from those on the ground, is peculiarly edifying, and indicates pretty clearly the changed relations of the northern and southern portions of the state. The section known as Southern California, which includes the seven southern counties, pays one-seventh of the taxes of the state, has one-sixth of the population and seven-twentieths of the area of all of California. As the case now stands, this section has about half of all the state exhibit worth mentioning in Chicago. As a San Francisco paper puts it: "The impression given to visitors at the world's fair is that the only cultivated portion of California is in the extreme south, and that the northern and middle sections are only mining camps."

When the allotment of space was made in the California building, the southern counties, finding themselves unable to display all of their goods in the room allowed them, decided to enter some of the department buildings and make a showing there. Room was offered in the horticultural building for a grove of orange trees and for a number of orange pieces of the sort with which Los Angeles people are familiar as the citrus fair. Two of these latter, the orange tower and the liberty bell worked out in oranges, are described by the Chicago papers as the most conspicuous and popular displays in the building. The grove of orange trees is also a drawing card, and has received much favorable notice from the eastern press. The northern counties, on the other hand, made no attempt to display their products in any of the department buildings, except in the one devoted to the mining industry. As the California building is not yet opened, and the public must depend for its ideas of this section on whatever may be seen in the department buildings, it naturally results that Southern California monopolizes all the credit of the show. Incidentally it may be observed that the Florida orange show is said to be quite insignificant when compared to that of Los Angeles, San Bernardino and San Diego counties.

The northern people have consoled themselves with the reflection that when the California building is opened their time will come; but from information received at this office from Chicago it appears that they are likely to suffer a disappointment. The building is now sufficiently advanced to admit of the unpacking and installing of the exhibits, and the work is far enough under way to show what the different sections have to present to the public. When the final touches are accomplished and the results are judged by the Californians and the world, we predict that the southern section of the state will carry off the honor to which she is justly entitled.

The state of California appropriated the sum of $300,000 for a state display. Of this amount $100,000 went into a building, which is not yet completed, and is not likely to be entirely finished until the 1st of July. The remaining $200,000 was to be used for a general state display. It would seem that, paying one-seventh of the taxes, this section of the state was entitled to one-seventh of that amount in some shape, viz., about $30,000. Wherein has Southern California been benefited by the labor or even by the existence of the state commission—leaving out the matter of the building? One concession was obtained from the state for the south, and that only after a hard fight—freight was paid on all exhibits sent before the 1st of May. The total amount thus expended by the state for Southern California is estimated by those having the work in charge at about $2500. The expenses of preparing the exhibit of Southern California and of installing and maintaining it in Chicago have been borne by the counties themselves. Over $500,000 was appropriated by the six southern counties (Riverside having then no existence), and but for this money Southern California would have no display whatever. This illustrates very clearly what share the south gets of general state appropriations.

The sum of $200,000 has certainly been spent by the commission outside of what was put into the building. Either the money was wasted or was spent on the north. It certainly was not laid out on the south. When the final reckoning comes and the financial reports of the commission are made public, we suspect that the old story of taxing the south to provide money for the north to spend on itself will be repeated.

country were kept from coming here. We quote from the article: "The eastern door of the California labor market was, in the first place, barricaded with literature. The Pacific coast unions made it their business to saturate the east with letters and articles going to show that California was no place for a working man. Every union in the Atlantic states was supplied with accounts of the suffering of unemployed men in San Francisco in the winter of 1878, and was left to infer that the situation was unchanged. At times articles were inserted in friendly papers on the coast, abounding in the same sense; these were scattered through the labor centers in the eastern states with such assiduity that it became an adage at Pittsburgh and New York and Boston: 'Whatever you do, don't go to California.' The prevalence of this opinion, coupled with the cost of a journey to a remote and unknown country, indisposed most workmen to cross the Rocky mountains. If there were any who were not to be frightened away, or who knew the real facts, they were subjected to other treatment. They learned on arrival that they must belong to a union in order to get work."

To belong to a union, however, was not an easy thing. If only one or two new ones came at a time they were taken in; but if there were a number of them, or they seemed to be the advance guard of a still greater number, they could not get admission to any of the unions—and therefore could not get employment at all. Everybody was told, and told sharply, that there was no room for new comers on the Pacific coast. If workmen were here who were not wanted they were politely but firmly told that they had better return whence they came. "Stories are current," one account goes on to say—"Stories are current of savage assaults on eastern mechanics who moved to the coast and persisted in remaining, contrary to the advice of the unions." If the accounts given of the despotism of the workingmen's unions of that period are half true, never was a wickered combination to rule business men or to bar out the individual worker from getting his bread.

Out of this combination it can be fairly claimed grew, years afterwards, the iron molders' strike which lasted twenty months, although the men who began the great revolt were getting $50 per day, and whose only grievance seemed to be that they could not control the details of the shops—no question being made of wages or of the hours of labor. More recently the great strike of the stevedores was inaugurated, whose folly and crimes are still fresh in the minds of all our readers. The apparent and admitted fact seems to be, that there has been a long-existing conspiracy amongst those who would dominate the labor field in San Francisco to keep laborers—especially skilled ones—from coming to the coast at all. The distance from other labor centers, and the peculiar isolation of this state, have so far made it easy for bold and cunning leaders to keep this field substantially to themselves. Nobody finds fault with the general advantage which labor has derived from been the pride and boast of all Californians that wages, in every department of the labor field, have been from 20 to 30 per cent higher than in the great centers of the east. Let us keep this advantage if we can; but let us do it legitimately. To send out such circulars as the one referred to above is to disparage, discredit and disgrace any labor or employment organization concerned in it. There are many unemployed men in San Francisco, as there are everywhere; but the representations sent out by these misguided agitators are false and fraudulent. When will men learn that there is nothing in this world ever to be preferred above the truth, and that upon this basis every question affecting right and duty must be at last decided?

THERE is one item in our county expenses which does not attract the attention and the remark it deserves. We refer to the cost of the six persons known as court deputies. These six departments average about half a day's session each—in the busy season. Three hours a day for five days in the week, and one hour for Saturdays, would be about fair as the time demanded of them. They are good looking and gentlemanly, and do their duties well. That there is nothing for them to do but to attend to the department, is nothing against them. They keep their places and their faces with becoming gravity, and on the first of every month they sign the pay-roll with a firm hand, and receive one hundred dollars therefor. If we were living in the old days when laborers were few and land values reaching skyward, all this would be well enough. But now good men would do these duties just as well for about half the money, and we submit it as a thing to be looked into.

PULLED THE PRIZES.

THE RESULT LAST NIGHT OF THE TUG OF WAR.

Several Exciting Contests—The East Los Angeles, the Seventh Regiment and Electric Teams Were the Winners.

The tug of war tournament was most brilliantly and successfully opened at Armory hall last night. There was a magnificent audience present, fairly filling the hall, while about one-half of the auditors were ladies. The three events of the opening evening were gamely contested, and the ground was contested inch by inch in each struggle. It was a splendid exhibition of physical skill and endurance, and the fitting opening of which the prizes were the greatest athletic event that ever took place in this city.

Early in the evening a telegram was read from Mr. McNeill of San Francisco, announcing that the big Canadian team of that city would arrive here today at noon. The three events of the evening opened with the contest between the East Los Angeles and Spanish team. When the crack of the pistol sounded sharp, the rope was loosened from the imprisoning lever like a flash, and then came the terrific strain. The boys of the East Los Angeles team straightened themselves out, and with a mighty tug heaved the red ribbon over a foot to the good. The Spanish team was quick to respond, but were unable to regain more than four inches of the vantage ground. Both teams laid by the rope for a few seconds to get their wind, and then the East Los Angeles boys put the pressure on again, and inch by inch the red ribbon on the center of the rope slowly moved their way, until at last, in 2 minutes and 32 seconds precisely from the starting signal, they had pulled the rope over the requisite five feet, and they were declared the victors amid a deafening salvo of cheers. There was a short intermission preparatory to the second event of the evening—the contest between the Seventh Regiment team and the Young American team, and the time was spent in tightening up the cleats in the platform for everybody recognized from the physique of the men of the opposing team that a lively struggle could be expected.

At 9:25 the band struck up the Star Spangled Banner, and the boys in blue, the Seventh regiment team, came in and were greeted with a round of cheers. A moment later the browney young American team came on the platform and were likewise lustily cheered. When the pistol was fired the rope was like a rod of steel, and for fully three minutes it was absolutely motionless, neither side making any headway, while the exertion was waxed to fever heat. Then the rope slipped a few inches to the side of the soldier boys, and the regimental contingent in the audience took up their seventh yell, "Rah! rah! rah! zip, boom, bang, viva la, viva la, Seventh regiment!" Then came the tug, and the young Americans labored manfully and great beads of perspiration stood on their brow, their efforts were unavailing, the rope went over three inches at a sprint until the decisive cleat was crossed and the pistol shot under the feet. It was a whirlwind of enthusiasm. The victors were fairly carried out on the shoulders of their comrades to the dressing rooms. The struggle lasted exactly 7 minutes and 35 seconds. The electric team gave a vigorous tug and took the rope over six inches to the good. Then the Pacific team regained about five inches and both teams took a rest for a few minutes. Suddenly the electric boys made a lightning-like plunge backward, and the red ribbon, and across the line in three successive tugs, amid wild cheering, and the referee, Mr. J. S. Thayer, announced that they had won in 7 minutes and 15 seconds.
