Exhibition of the Pasadena Art Union. The Usual Harmless Runaway. Personal and News Notes.

PASADENA, Dec. 17.—Arrangements are rapidly being perfected for the tournament of roses on New Year's day, which will undoubtedly eclipse anything in this line that Pasadena has ever undertaken. Last year's tournament was a great success, but this time it will be greater. The committee is actively at work and is meeting with encouragement from all sides. The committee was sent over to invite the Los Angeles chamber of commerce to take part and met with a ready response from that body, the directors deciding that they would attend in a body at a specially decorated coach. Messrs. M. W. Weight and W. H. Hill, the committee from the Tournament association, were presented with the following resolution.

Whereas, The people of Pasadena are planning a floral parade to take place on January 1, to be known as the tournament of roses; and Whereas, The city of Pasadena has always co-operated with the city of Los Angeles in the Floral parade and prizes in which the chamber of commerce has been interested; therefore, be it Resolved, By the directors of the chamber that they call upon the members of this organization to interest themselves in the proposed tournament as far as possible, and as many as are able to do so to participate in the parade.

ART EXHIBITION

There was a large attendance of members this afternoon at the opening of the Pasadena Art Union exhibition in the board of trade rooms on West Colorado street. Tomorrow the exhibition will be thrown open to the general public.

The exhibition is composed principally of small sketches in water colors and oils, among the well-known artists represented being W. L. Judson, Julius Ludovick, Miss Edith White, Mrs. E. B. Farr, Miss Marie Johnson, Miss Anna Meeker, Mr. D. Sammann, Alice Bell Dane and Miss Sweet. Mr. Sammann, whose studio is in the Arcadia block, has an original subject in oil, it being the design accepted in competition for the decoration of a New York courtroom. The middle panel of the picture represents the Goddess of Justice seated between two pillars, with the American shield above her head. She holds the scales, and a lion lies at her feet, while an old man, representing Wisdom, ponders over the laws.

The left panel of the picture represents Slavery. There helpless women, children and old men in chains welcome justice, as an angel, bearing a lily. On the right is a thief with a bag of stolen money; a murderer and his victim, etc., and Justice as Lucifer. The painting attracts great attention.

THE REGULAR RUNAWAY A lively runaway, which at first looked as though it would be disastrous in its results, took place this evening about 7 o'clock. George Crane, who drives a public carriage for Briggs, at Union street liveryman, was standing with his spirited team in front of Wood's drug store, on Colorado street, when the team took flight at something, and when he began to pull them up one of the lines broke. They were facing the east, but when the line broke the pull on the other turned them round, and Crane, seeing that he had no possible chance while he remained in the vehicle, jumped out, but they were off like the wind before he could get to their heads. They dashed up West Colorado street at a neck-and-neck speed and were soon out of sight. Fortunately it was late enough in the evening so that there were almost no teams on the street, and the result was a disastrous collision would have been almost inevitable. When the team reached the vicinity of the Terminal station they were stopped, with no damage to speak of.
