Car Lost Step

A west bound Westlake car on Second street, when nearing Broadway, struck an upturned lid of a manhole yesterday afternoon and lost the step, which was cut off as neatly and smoothly as if it had been a piece of paper in a pair of shears. Beyond this, no damage was done.

Beaten and Robbed

Pomposo Garcia, 626 Mission road, is now in the receiving hospital suffering from a number of severe wounds and bruised about his head and face, said to have been inflicted by two robbers who held him up late Tuesday night while he was but a few hundred feet from his home. He lost $9.

Oceano Beach Lots

The opening of new offices of the Oceano Beach syndicate met with an unprecedented success in the sale of lots. Sales were made all day yesterday to customers who purchased from one lot to an entire block each, and the first subdivision placed on the market, it is stated, is about one-fourth sold. The company is offering the first subdivision at low prices and upon very moderate terms to purchasers under the direction of the McCarthy company.

Pass-Key Burglars Busy

The pass-key burglar is again at work in Los Angeles, from all indications at detective headquarters. Half a dozen cases were reported to the police yesterday and in each instance the pass-key was in evidence. A music box valued at $20 was reported stolen from a flat at 136 West Fifth street, and from the Hotel Cumberland came a complaint that two stick pins had been taken from the room of Mrs. M. Flynn. FAMOUS WRITER
VISITING CITYAUTHOR OF "MY MARYLAND"
MUCH IMPRESSED

GETS DATA FOR ARTICLES

James R. Randall, One of the South's
Most Distinguished Sons, Tells
How California Wonders
Strike Him

James R. Randall, the man who composed "Maryland, My Maryland," is writing a series of articles on Los Angeles and Southern California. He has been in the city for several weeks collecting data and he says he cannot speak too highly of this wonderful country.

Mr. Randall was formerly editor of the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle-Sentinel, and is now prominently identified with the journalistic world. He is one of that coterie of the South's distinguished sons who made its history, framed its romance and sang its songs. Side by side in ante-bellum days he stood with the famous Father Ryan and mingled his notes of melody over the dying form of the old South, and with tuneful harmony he joined with the masterly Grady, the classic Dawson, the impassioned Lamar and the meteoric Graves in rendering picturesque and romantic its subsequent resurrection.

Modest, Charming, Magnetic
Modest in person, charming in manner, and exceptionally magnetic, Mr. Randall has won a place among the celebrities of his era. Being a devout Catholic, many honors have been shown him by members of that faith and he has contributed many gems to current church literature.

"It was in 1861, in Point Coupee parish, Louisiana, that 'My Maryland' was written," said Mr. Randall. "I remember so well having read in the old New Orleans Delta, then a daily newspaper, of the Massachusetts troops going through Baltimore, and naturally I was much excited. That night I tried to sleep, but somehow or other I could not. Then the lines of 'My Maryland' came to me. They seemed to haunt me until finally I got up out of bed and wrote them down. Next day I showed the poem to several friends, who advised me to send it to the Delta for publication. I did so and soon found that I had made quite a hit. That is the whole story of 'My Maryland.'"

Likes California

Mr. Randall likes California, but he says the people are inclined to be a little too much on the money-grabbing order. They are generous, kind hearted, energetic and bright, he grants, but they impress him as being somewhat over-indulgent with "fakirs" and "fake" enterprises. The contrast between Los Angeles and San Francisco is great, he avers; it is like a tale of two cities, one on this continent, the other across the water.

"I was rather surprised to learn when in San Francisco that the people fear Los Angeles as a competitor more than any other coast city," said Mr. Randall. "Of course, I knew very little about Los Angeles then, but since coming here and studying over your great country I am convinced that you will some day rank among the greatest cities of the earth. Los Angeles will have a million population before many years roll around."

Mr. Randall thinks Los Angeles is the greatest convention city in America.

Mr. Randall expects to leave for New Orleans the latter part of this week. He will make the Crescent city his permanent home.

BID TOO LOW TO SUIT
MEMBER OF COUNCILHe of Green Goggles and Long Gloves
Holds Up Contract of Supply Committee

The councilman from the Sixth ward who is chairman of the supply committee, held up a contract yesterday because the bid which should have purchased the printing of the tax receipts slips for the city tax department was $250 lower than any of the others which were submitted.

The Times-Mirror company offered to do the printing for $341. The next lowest bid was for $600. He of the automobile goggles and the long gloves could not see why the city should profit by so large a difference in its favor and demanded that the contracts should be withheld until Saturday morning for an investigation.

"SON IS DEAD," STORY
USED TO GET MONEYST. PAUL TOURISTS STRANDED IN LOS ANGELES

Sorrowing Parents Ask Aid of Chief of Police, and Learn Their Boy and Companion Are Alive and Well

William is dead. Don't come. Please send me sufficient funds to give your son a decent burial. H. C. HAMMER.

This is the wording of the third telegram sent by Hammer and William J. Godske to the latter's parents in the east, in order, to extract funds for them while they were having a good time in Los Angeles.

It is said the young men, who are St. Paul tourists, became stranded in a rooming house on South Olive street a few weeks ago, and in order to increase their funds, sent a telegram to Godske's parents in St. Paul, stating that their son was sick and in need of money.

A check for $20 was forthcoming at once.

When the first remittance was exhausted the telegram was again resorted to. Godske was reported to be in a still more serious physical condition.

ST. PAUL, Minn. H. C. Hammer: William's sister has started for Los Angeles to care for her brother in his serious illness.

His FATHER.
This was the unexpected message that was flashed back across the wires and called forth the "death telegram." The parents of young Godske in St. Paul could not fully realize the news of their son's sudden death and Chief Hammer was asked for further information on the subject.

When the chief of police called at the South Olive street rooming house yesterday, Godske, with his fatal malady, had disappeared from the scene of action.

"DEATH VALLEY" SCOTT
TIRES OF NOTORIETYEccentric Miner Spends Almost Entire Day in His Rooms at Hotel

All charm of the publicity, which in the past "Death Valley" Scott seemed to revel in, has evidently faded away and the longing to attract attention by scattering his money about profusely undoubtedly has given away to a desire for seclusion and quietude.

Since arriving in Los Angeles Monday evening the freakish escapades of the miner have ceased. All day yesterday Scott in company with his wife remained at the Lankershim and not until late in the afternoon did either leave their rooms.

The new mood of the man from Death valley has been quite noticeable to the employees of the hotels. Though he continues to tip those whose services he requires it is with more normal fees than he has been wont to distribute in the past. Large numbers of letters continue to pour in upon the man from all conceivable sources.

WOMAN SEVERELY BURNED
IN GASOLINE EXPLOSIONINJURIES SUSTAINED IN RESCUE
OF BABY

Lighted Match Dropped Near Cleaning Basin Started Flames Which Set Fire to Infant's Clothing, and Mother Risks Life to Save Child

In attempting to save her baby from death in flames caused by an explosion of a basin of gasoline, Mrs. B. C. Canfield, 420 South Flower street, sustained serious burns about the head and face and had a narrow escape from death.

The baby was sitting upon a table near the basin of gasoline while the mother was cleaning clothes. Mrs. Canfield stepped to the stove to start a fire and in casting the match aside she allowed it to fall near the basin of gasoline and the explosion followed.

Screaming in terror for help, she ran to the rescue of the baby and her face and head were severely burned. A man who was working near the house heard the report of the explosion and the woman's screams and ran to her assistance in time to aid in extinguishing the flames which had spread to the clothing of mother and baby.
