ence, while her sister, who is equally well known as a painter, was in the studio of Whistler.

In speaking of the work of the Arts and Crafts society, Miss Holden said: "In San Francisco there is a little company of artists, about 125 in all, that open a studio every December for an exhibit. My own work is that of book-binding, tooling, designing and mosaic decoration. In my studio in San Francisco I have about fifteen girls constantly at work and our aim is not to do so much work each year, but to do our best work upon each article we manufacture. The time element is one which never appeals to an artist."
