HARRIMAN AFTER FISH'S JOB

Illinois Central's President May Be Supplanted in October

By Associated Press. NEW YORK, June 30.—Proxies for the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Illinois Central railroad in October were made today to the shareholders of the road.

The proxies are made out in the name of Stuyvesant Fish, president of the road, with John C. Welling, vice president, as alternative.

The officers of the road say they had not heard of any movement to obtain proxies in opposition to President Fish.

The Times today says it has been said for some time that the Harriman interests in the Illinois Central might make an effort at the meeting next October to supplant Mr. Fish. It remains to be seen how far Mr. Fish will retain the support of the stockholders whose proxies have re-elected him president of the road year after year.

FIGHT CHICAGO EL ROADS

Removal of All Loop Stations Sought by Law

By Associated Press. CHICAGO, June 30.—Removal of all stations on the elevated loop is asked for in a suit filed by the city of Chicago in Judge Mack's court yesterday against the Northwestern Elevated Railroad company and other elevated roads.

The bill also prays that the loop ordinances be declared void, that all the elevated companies be denied the right to maintain stations in the streets and that they be perpetually enjoined from constructing stations on streets covered by the loop.

The validity of the ordinance is attacked on the ground that consent of a majority of the frontage was not legally obtained in any case.

DETENTION HOSPITAL IS WHITE ELEPHANT TAXPAYERS ASK WHAT'S THE ANSWER

Los Angeles Citizens Vote $50,000 Bonds for Pest House, Wait Two Years and Find Buildings Useless and Decaying From Neglect

The outbreak sewer is assuming the proportions of a blot on the municipal escutcheon; the garbage situation smells to high heaven; but the detention hospital is the skeleton in the municipal closet that clanks its rotting bones in derision at Los Angeles taxpayers who have already been mulcted for $56,000 to feed its grinning jaws.

Nearly three years ago the board of health concluded that a pest house was necessary. It sent a recommendation to that effect to the city council. The council called an election to vote bonds for the pest house and placed the amount, at $50,000. The people, always fearful of a smallpox epidemic, cheerfully voted the bonds.

After the bond money was available it seemed that very elaborate preparations were necessary before a pest house for the accommodation of smallpox patients could be constructed, and a year and a half passed before anything was done.

A little more than a year ago the construction of the pest house, politely called the detention hospital, was begun and today the city has a beautiful little administration building with accommodations for a superintendent physician and a corps of assisting physicians, an immense engine house with 40 horse power boilers, sufficient to run the largest manufacturing concern in Los Angeles, six neat little cottages for smallpox patients, a quarantine station and laundry. These are all located in Chavez ravine, and are practically inaccessible to anything but birds and airships.

Building Stands Empty For this beautiful display of architecture the city has paid $56,000 and before the plans of Architect J. C. Austin are completed several thousand dollars additional will probably be paid out.

The question now arises, "Although the hospital is ready for use there is no one to use it. The place presents the aspect of a deserted village and although all the buildings are brand new they are beginning to assume the appearance of dry rot that characterizes all unused buildings, however new they may be."

There is no one at the detention hospital to soil them, therefore the big 40 horse power boilers are idle and as the city cannot afford to pay an engineer to maintain these boilers, rust is already beginning to attack them.

As there is nothing at the detention hospital to require administration there is no administering being done in the administration building. As there are no sick to heal there is no necessity for the chief physician and his staff, therefore there is no chief physician and staff.

Responsibility for the cumbersome white elephant is hard to fix. The members of the board of health who preceded those now in office and who recommended that a smallpox hospital be erected, deny having planned any such monstrosity as the city now has on its hands. Members of the old council all have conveniently forgotten about all they ever knew about the detention hospital.

The present board of health had little to do with it save to accept the situation as they found it. Even their suggestions of changes to be made in the plans before being executed have been coldly received. It is probably up to the board of public works to accept the hospital as a municipal institution, which it will probably do, although not without a wary face, for the board has become hardened by just such legacies from incompetent city officials. It will be just one more burden piled on their aching shoulders to take its place with the outfall sewer, the garbage situation and the street sweeping contract.

SAILOR THOUGHT THE SALOON SAUSAGE BARKED

BO'SUN BILL STARTS TROUBLE IN THIRST PARLOR

Sings Nautical Songs, Pays His Good Money for Drinks and Has All Hands Happy Till Refrain From Lunch Counter

There were ten minutes' old-fashioned rough house last night in a South Main street place where they serve a mule's ear full of amber fluid and a free lunch that would make Upton Sinclair think his work had been in vain.

Things had been going rather slow and no one had compelled the bar-keep to vault the mahogany with his bungstarter for an hour.

A sailor from the good ship Nancy Bell, which dropped her mudhook in the outer harbor at San Pedro at sundown, started things.

"Oh, I am a cook and a captain bold. And the mate of the Nancy brig. A bo'sun tight and a midshipmite. And the crew of the captain's gig."

"That'll be about all from you," said the mixer as he gripped the bung starter.

"I said we'd take about nineteen bars' rest on that orchestration."

"Aw, let him sing. Wot we pay our good money for if it ain't for entertainment"—this from the crowd of spenders.

"Is he singing? I thought he was filing a saw."

The sailor saw the joke. He turned to the crowd and blew a shrill blast on a boatswain's whistle and roared: "All hands on deck, witness punishment!"

Everybody applauded. "Give every able seaman a bootleg full of your bloomin' deck wash," was the boatswain's order to the surly bar-keeper. He accompanied the order with a shining gold pipe and the bar-keeper cheered up a bit and served the suds.

"You want some more of that?" asked the sailor. "Sure, 'ere loose," said a dusty desert-dust out of his throat. "Here you are, then, the pleasure is yours. I'll survive if you do."

THE SAUSAGE BARKS

The marine picked up a half dozen links of that which has brought Upton Sinclair gold and glory galore, and seemingly from the musty meat came a volume of barks and growls that spelled rabies and sudden death to some one.

"That'll be a good place to saw it off," said the barkeeper when the naval man stopped to catch his breath.

"Say, shipmate, ain't my money good?" asked the marine. "Your money's good, but your voice needs sandpapering," was the gruff response.

Blat No. 2 Bo'sun Bill blew a long, shrill blast on his pipe and the dispenser.

"All hands on deck! Port anchor watch stand by!"

"Do, I have to hear any more of that?" broke in the dispenser.

"No, go out into the alley and kick yourself to death," said the prospector, who was as hungry for song as he was for other things of civilization.

"Give every good man and true another scuttle of your vile suds," said the tar as he flashed another piece of gold.

"Want more, my hearties?" queried the man of the sea.

"Sure!" came the roar loud and clear.

"There was me and the cook and the captain bold. And the mate of the Nancy brig. The bo'sun tight and the midshipmite. And the crew of the captain's gig."

For a month we'd neither wittles nor drink. Till hungry did we feel. Then we drew a lot and accordin' shot. The captain for our meal.

Heads for Lunch Counter "Say, how much more is there of that?" broke in the man with the bungstarter.

HERE TROUBLE BEGINS

The seaman blew a long blast on his pipe, hitched his trousers in true nautical way, calmly sizing up the big barkeep.

"Now, shipmate, don't you go getting hostile a lot. I was Tawm Sharkey's sparring partner."

He didn't have time to finish his reminiscence. The barkeep rushed and the sailor cleverly sidestepped and handed across a stinger which brought blood from the bartender's nose.

Some friends mixed in and the sailor was kept busy, but he took care of himself until the prospector got in. It was two to ten, but the desert man and the tar held their own, taking and giving until the police arrived.

As the patrol wagon rattled up the first street toward the station the street crowds heard the shrill pipe of a boatswain's whistle and caught a bar of an old melody:

"Oh, I never larfs and I never smiles. An' I never larfs nor plays. But I sit and I smoke and my only jokin' is when I say."

"Oh, I am a cook and a captain bold. And the mate of the Nancy brig. The bo'sun tight and the midshipmite. And the crew of the captain's gig."
