Lack of Electricity is shown in weakness of any organ of the body, in backache, lumbago, rheumatism, nerve weakness, indigestion, stomach, kidney and bowel trouble. Why? Because the nerves control the organs and muscles and electricity supplies to the nerves the power to control. Electricity is a nerve food. When the supply is lacking the nerves the conductor of a freight train that passes through here daily today told of a pet lizard four inches long that has lived in the caboose for the last year. Just as soon as the nature and the conductor to sleep the lizard crawls upon his bosom and when a fly, mosquito or other insect comes around it is caught by a swift movement of the lizard's tongue. JAIL NO LONGER HAVEN OF REST

Vermont Deputy Sheriff with a Gun Makes Tramps Chop Wood for Ten Hours Every Day

Special to The Herald.

BRATTLEBORO, Vt., Aug. 3.—An act of the recent legislature has carried consternation through the ranks of the famous Vermont division of the veterans of Coxe's army.

The first section of the act provides that any prisoner in the jail at Newtane may be compelled to work ten hours each working day either in the jail or outside. The deputy sheriff has a haven of rest. There were all the luxuries that a tramp's heart could desire—a warm bed, plenty to eat and nothing to do but play cards the livelong day. Now all is different.

Sheriff Thompson took prompt advantage of the opportunity offered him under the law and set his wards to work, even though they complained bitterly.

For the last several weeks the prisoners have been obliged to arise from their beds at dawn and work through the weary day cutting wood.

The deputy sheriff boasted a deputy out of a farmer with a large amount of wood to cut, and every day, when the weather is not too stormy, the jailbirds swing axes as lustily as the cold compels them to do to keep warm.

The deputy sheriff carries a long-barreled shotgun and keeps the tramps hustling.

Many of the tramps have developed blisters under the unaccustomed use of the ax.

This spring the tramps will be put to work on the roads which will be made by the last legislature.

If this news gets to the ears of the National Brotherhood, Sons of Rest, probably they will prefer to spend the summer at Newport, R. I., rather than in the rock-ribbed state of Vermont.

All officers have been instructed to make as many arrests as possible under the law, in order that the "chain gang" may be increased to as many as possible.

Youths Sentenced to Prison

By Associated Press.

SACRAMENTO, Aug. 3.—Edward Jones, 21 years old, and Walter Wardner, 21 years of age, were sentenced by Superior Judge Hughes to serve a term of five years each at Folsom this morning. They confessed to entering freight cars and stealing a case of shoes. Wardner collapsed when returned to his cell.

Everything you want you will find in the classified page. One cent a word.

HUGE ELECTRIC SIGN MAKES HIS HEALTH BAD

Special to The Herald.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Aug. 3.—Frederick Kummel, of West District, whose business is in the circuit court against the Oliver Chilled pipe works, in which he asks $5000 damages and a perpetual injunction against the defendants and against the keeping, maintaining and operating a harmful electric sign 300 feet long, which has been in operation only two days on the warehouse of the plant. He says the sign, which has more than 4000 incandescent lights and requires 165-horse power, turns night into day, produces ill-health and discomfort to himself and family, shakes his house and induces men and boys to congregate about his premises, play ball all night and indulge in loud talk and riotous revelry."

SAYS TREES ARE FASTIDIOUS THINGS

FORESTER DECLARES THEY CAN NOT BE ACCLIMATIZED

Interesting Report Shows Habits of Plants Are Firmly Fixed by Characteristics of Occupation of Certain Latitudes

Trees cannot be acclimatized, says a recent report of the forestry branch of the department of agriculture.

Trees are fixed, almost inflexible, in their habits. For centuries, indeed as long as we have record, each species has kept in its beaten ways; insisting on the same average of temperature and refusing to grow where this could not be found; seeking and occupying certain amounts of moisture and avoiding situations where these were wanting.

The latest authorities go so far as to declare that trees cannot be acclimatized and perseverance of man are unable to induce trees to change their habits far enough to adopt a country not closely like their native habitat. For a time the forester may use various devices to surprise his special tree, but the tree is deluded into feeling at home. But as soon as the forester's care is withdrawn in such cases the tree is seized with homesickness and dies of it.

This fastidiousness in the habits of trees at its good and its bad sides. It absolutely limits the forester's choice of trees to grow in a given region. To seek to force tree growth in uncongenial conditions is entirely fruitless. But, on the other hand, there is a practical certainty if beech or spruce thrives where the average warmth and moisture of the growing season from year to year ranges between certain degrees, then wherever else, in the northern hemisphere at least, the same average is found, there it will grow. The same average induces trees to plant beech or spruce, whether or not they be already there, with confidence that they will flourish.

Trees Are Fastidious

The same law works both ways. If the forester finds beech or spruce or any other tree growing in a region of which the climatic conditions are not recorded he knows within very narrow limits on the climatic side, simply because he knows that at home this tree grows in such a climate. In other words, trees, especially of course those which are particularly fastidious, are very satisfactory substitutes for thermometer and barometer so far as the average temperature and moisture conditions during the vegetative season are concerned.

There is a close relation between a tree's demands upon temperature and its demands upon soil. Given the soil, the temperature it will grow where the soil is unfriendly; and given the most congenial soil it will grow where the temperature is not ideal. The colder and wetter the soil the better will it grow with a relatively high temperature; the warmer the soil the better will it grow with a relatively low temperature. Thus, on a northern slope the forester will often find it safe to plant trees which would not thrive on the southern slope of the same mountain, because the northern slopes are cooler and moister than southern ones, and this difference may suffice to offset a slight disadvantage in the general temperature of the region.

Should Work with Nature

There is a wide variation among trees as to the range of temperature which they endure. Some, such as the Douglas fir, yellow pine and cedar, are hardy, grow over wide areas from north to south; others, such as Mexican white pine, cypripine or redwood, are more narrowly confined. But it should not be inferred that the distribution of any species is determined by the distribution of the right temperature conditions may be found outside of the geographic distribution at higher or lower altitudes. A southern species whose home is in the mountains may possess a second home in the northern part of a level country, and a northern lowland species may thrive also on mountains in the south.

Frequently trees are distributed over a country not continuously but in patches, like black hemlock, which occurs in the Sierras, in the Cascades, and at sea level in Alaska, but not in the lower country between. This is simply because the required temperature, though prevalent in the northern part of the country, is found only in the higher altitudes as one goes farther and farther to the south.

The forester, following these broad first principles of silviculture, may work in harmony with nature and so achieve every locality the best results with the lowest percentage of failure.

SITS UP IN HIS COFFIN AND ASKS FOR A DRINK

Special to The Herald.

LANDER, Wyo., August 3.—Edward Beck, a Wyoming sheep herder, sat up in his coffin and called for a drink of whisky thirty-six hours after what was believed to have been his death and just as his funeral was about to be held.

No doctor examined Beck's body after his supposed death, but friends who examined it saw no signs of life, and believing he was dead, made a crude coffin, put the remains in it and arranged to bury them.

His supposed death occurred on the range, where he was herding sheep, and the funeral was to be held at a sheep camp. A number of men who knew Beck were gathered about the coffin and one of them was about to read a passage from the scriptures, when Beck sat up and called for a drink. He said he had not felt sick before losing consciousness, and save a slight dizziness, felt no ill effects from his death-like sleep. He got the whisky.

GIVES A WOMAN SEAT IN CAR AND LOSES LIFE

Special to The Herald.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Aug. 3.—Because he was so gallant George Gray of 2800 Carey alley, Pittsburg, is dead, Carey, a young married man, was on an open car with his wife, when a woman was crowded on. There was no seat for her, and Gray, who was on the inside end of a seat, motioned for the woman to crowd down. He got up and gave her the seat beside his wife.

Gray was a large man, and it was necessary for him to lean out over the rail to allow the woman to slip into his seat. This he did with a laugh, which was his last sound, as another fast-flying car coming from the opposite direction caught him, knocking him off the car and dragging him some distance, fatally injuring him.

PET LIZARD GUARDS SLEEPERS IN CABOOSE

Special to The Herald.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Aug. 3.—The conductor of a freight train that passes through here daily today told of a pet lizard four inches long that has lived in the caboose for the last year. Just as soon as the nature and the conductor to sleep the lizard crawls upon his bosom and when a fly, mosquito or other insect comes around it is caught by a swift movement of the lizard's tongue. The conductor says that no netting or blinds are ever necessary to keep out such insects when the lizard is about.
