

PAY TRIBUTE TO MCKINLEY

MAUSOLEUM, NATION'S GIFT, IS DEDICATED PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT LAUDS GOOD DEEDS

Six Hundred Thousand Dollar Monument is Erected to the Memory of the Martyred Executive

By Associated Press. CANTON, O., Sept. 30.—The McKinley mausoleum, the tribute and gift of a nation to the memory of the martyred president, was dedicated this afternoon in the presence of hundreds of distinguished men from all parts of the United States and representatives of foreign countries and a crowd of approximately 50,000 persons.

A feature of the dedication was the presence of President Roosevelt, Vice President Fairbanks, members of the president's cabinet, United States senators and governors of several states.

Addresses were delivered by President Roosevelt and Justice William R. Day, McKinley's secretary of state, Governor Harris of Ohio acted as president of the day.

The program ended with the singing of "America" and benediction by Bishop Horstman of Cleveland.

President Roosevelt and party then visited the interior of the tomb. The invited guests and the general public did likewise.

The funds passed through the tomb. The tomb, built at a cost of $600,000, is the donation of over a million Americans to the memory of William McKinley.

President Roosevelt, surrounded by members of the reception committee, other committees, distinguished guests and others, occupied a central position in the grand stand.

The parade included troops of the Twelfth United States cavalry and of various infantry regiments, McKinley's regiment as guard of honor, Royal Legion, G. A. R. veterans, Spanish war veterans, and other veterans. McKinley clubs of various cities, Ohio state troops and Masons, Odd Fellows, Woodmen, Elks and other fraternal organizations. The section of the city immediately surrounding the reviewing stand was roped off as was also other parts of the town.

At this point the soldiers stood shoulder to shoulder and no one was allowed near the chief executive. He was closely guarded by secret service men, who also walked by the side of his carriage.

Escorted to Auditorium When the parade had finally passed the reviewing stand President Roosevelt was immediately escorted to the auditorium, where the official luncheon was served, partaken of by all the invited guests.

Those who rode with the president from the reviewing stand to the auditorium were President Fairbanks, Secretary Loeb and Governor Harris. Carriages followed containing among the others, Secretary Cortelyou, Secretary Garfield, Secretary Wilson, Justice Day, Major Loebel, Justice McKenna, Lieutenant Colonel James, Lieutenant General and Major Horstman, James Whitcomb Riley and John Mitchell.

After luncheon the presidential party and honored guests proceeded directly to Monument hill, two miles west of the city. The situation of the mausoleum is nearly a mile from the city center and was reached by a private road. Thousands of unofficial visitors boarded the street cars and walked toward Monument hill. This gave them ample time to reach the monument by foregoing luncheon.

The crowd was massed around the central grand stand, to which only ticket-holders were admitted. Both in the city and at the monument there also were private grand stands to which admittance was charged at a high figure. Some of these were authorized by the memorial committee on condition that a percentage of the proceeds be devoted to the national McKinley Memorial association to be used toward meeting the expenses of the day.

Roosevelt's Address The president said: "We have gathered together today to pay our meed of respect and affection to the memory of William McKinley, who as president won a place in the hearts of the American people such as but three or four of all the presidents of this country have ever won. He was of singular uprightness and purity of character, alike in public and in private life; a citizen who loved peace, he did his duty faithfully and well for four years of war when the honor of the nation called him to arms. As congressman, as governor of his state, and finally as president, he rose to the foremost place among our statesmen, reaching a position which would satisfy the keenest ambition; but he never lost that simple and thoughtful kindness toward every human being, great or small, lofty or humble, with whom he was brought in contact, which so endeared him to our people.

"He had to grapple with more serious and complex problems than any president since Lincoln, and yet, while meeting every demand of statesmanship, he continued to live a beautiful and touching family life, a life very healthy for this nation to see in its foremost citizen; and now the woman who walked in the shadow ever after his death, the wife to whom his loss was a calamity more crushing than it could be to any other human being, lies beside him here in the same sepulcher.

Inscription Appropriate "There is a singular appropriateness in the inscription on his monument. Mr. Cortelyou, whose relations with him were of such close intimacy, gives me the following information about it. On the president's trip to the Pacific slope in the spring of 1901 President Wheeler of the University of California conferred the degree of LL. D. upon him in words so well chosen that they struck the fastidious taste of John Hay, then secretary of state, who wrote and asked for a copy of them from President Wheeler. On the receipt of this copy he sent the following letter to President McKinley, a letter which now seems filled with a strange and unconscious foreknowledge:

"President Wheeler sent me the enclosed at my request. You will have the words in more permanent shape. They seem to me remarkably well chosen, and stately and dignified enough to serve—long hence, please God—as your epitaph.

Yours faithfully, JOHN HAY, University of California, Office of the President.

"By authority vested in me by the regents of the University of California, I confer the degree of Doctor of Laws upon William McKinley, president of the United States, a statesman singularly gifted to unite the discordant forces of the government and mold the diverse purposes of men toward progressive and salutary action, a man whose noble policy of judgment has been tested and vindicated in a succession of national emergencies; good citizen, brave soldier, wise executive, helper and leader men, exemplar to his people of the virtues that build and conserve the state, society and the home. "Berkeley, May 15, 1901." "It would be hard to imagine an epitaph which a good citizen would be more anxious to deserve or one which would more happily describe the qualities of that great and good citizen whose life we here commemorate. He possessed to a very extraordinary degree the gift of unflinching discipline, firmness and security from them a harmonious action which told for good government. From purposes not merely diverse, but bitterly conflicting he was able to secure healthful action for the good of the state.

Rose to Emergencies "In both peace and judgment he rose level to the several emergencies he had to meet as leader of the nation, and like all men with the root of true greatness in them he grew to steadily larger stature under the stress of heavy responsibilities. He was a good citizen and a brave soldier, a chief executive whose wisdom entitled him to the trust which he received throughout the nation. He was not only a leader of men but pre-eminently a helper of men; for one of his most marked traits was his intensely human quality of his wide and deep sympathy.

"Finally, he not merely preached, he was, that most valuable of all citizens in a democracy like ours, a man who in the highest place served as an unconscious example to his people of the virtues that build and conserve alike our public life, and the foundation of all public life, the intimate life of the home.

"Many lessons are taught us by his career, but none more valuable than the lesson of broad human sympathy for and among all our citizens of all classes and creeds. No other president has ever more deserved to have his life work characterized in Lincoln's words as being carried on 'with malice toward none, with charity toward all.' As a boy he worked hard with his hands; he entered the army as a private soldier, he knew poverty; he earned his own livelihood; and by his own exertions he finally rose to the position of a man of moderate means. Not merely was he in personal touch with farmer and town dweller, with capitalist and workman, but he felt an intimate understanding of each; he knew the intimate sympathy with each; and his consistent effort was to try to judge all by the same standard and to treat all with the same justice. Arrogance toward the weak, and envious hatred of those who were off, were equally abhorrent to his just and gentle soul.

A Worthy Example "Surely this attitude of his should be the attitude of our people today. It would be a great disaster to this country to permit ourselves to adopt an attitude of hatred and envy toward success worthily won, toward wealth honestly acquired. Let us in this respect profit by the example of the republics of this western hemisphere to the south of us. Some of these republics have prospered greatly; but there are certain ones that have lagged far behind, that still continue in a condition of material poverty, of social and political unrest and confusion. Without exception the republics of the former class are those in which honest industry has been assured of reward and protection; those where a cordial welcome has been extended to the kind of enterprise which benefits the whole country, while incidentally, as is right and proper, giving substantial rewards to those who manifest it. On the other hand, the poor and backward republics, the republic in which the lot of the average citizen is least desirable, and the lot of the laboring man worst of all, are precisely those republics in which industry has been killed because wealth exposed its owner to spoliation. To these communities foreign capital may rarely come, because it has been found that as soon as capital is employed so as to give substantial remuneration to those supplying it, it excites ignorant envy and hostility, which result in such oppressive action, within or without the law, as sooner or later to work a virtual confiscation. Every manifestation of feeling of this kind in our civilization should be crushed at the outset by the weight of a sensible public opinion.

Encourage Honesty "From the standpoint of our material prosperity there is only one other thing as important as the discouragement of a spirit of envy and hostility toward honest business men, toward honest men of means; this is the discouragement of dishonest business men, the war upon the chicanery and wrongdoing which are peculiarly repulsive, peculiarly noxious, when exhibited by men who have no excuse of want, of poverty, of ignorance, for their crimes.

"Men of means, and above all men of great wealth, can exist in safety under the peaceful protection of the state, only in orderly societies, where liberty manifests itself through and under the law. It is these men who, more than any others, should, in the interest of the class to which they belong, in the interests of their children, and their children's children, seek in every way, but especially in the conduct of their lives, to insist upon and to build up respect for the law.

"It may not be true from the standpoint of some particular individual of this class, but in the long run it is pre-eminently true from the standpoint of the class as a whole, no less than of the country as a whole, that it is a veritable calamity to achieve a temporary triumph by violation or evasion of the law; and we are the best friends of the man of property who stands up for the law, when we set our faces like flint against those offenders who do wrong in order to acquire great wealth or who use this wealth as a help to wrongdoing.

"Wrongdoing is confined to no class. Good and evil are to be found among both rich and poor, and in drawing the line among our fellows we must draw it on conduct and not on worldly possessions. In the abstract most of us will admit this.

"In the concrete we can act upon such doctrine only if we really have knowledge of an sympathy with one another. If both the wage worker and the capitalist are able to enter each into the other's life, to meet him so as to get into genuine sympathy with him, most of the misunderstanding between them will disappear and its place will be taken by a judgment broader, juster, more kindly, and more generous for each will find in the other the same essential human attributes that exist in himself. It was President McKinley's peculiar glory that in actual practice he realized this as it is given to but few men to realize it; that his broad and deep sympathies made him feel a genuine sense of oneness with all his fellow-Americans, whatever their station or work in life, so that to his soul they were all joined with him in a great brotherly democracy of the spirit.

"It is not given to many of us in our lives actually to realize this attribute to the extent that he did; but we can at least have it before us as the goal of our endeavor, and by so doing we shall pay honor better than in any other way to the memory of the dead president whose services in life we this day commemorate.

TAFT TALKS FOR PEACE

SECRETARY OF WAR REASSURES JAPAN GREAT BRITAIN MAKES UGLY INSINUATION Dispatch from London Says United States is Tired of Hectoring by Japanese and Means to End It

By Associated Press. TOKIO, Sept. 30.—Secretary Taft in his speech at the municipal dinner given in his honor tonight denied emphatically the reports that the relations between the United States and Japan were at any time strained.

"This developed as a result of the publication in the Asahi of a special dispatch from London asserting on high authority that the Washington statesmen are 'tired of the retreating attitude of Japanese officialdom, hence the dispatch of the American battle fleet to the Pacific and the changed tone of the Japanese since the orders were issued.'

In view of the extremely friendly attitude of the Japanese toward Mr. Taft the publication of the dispatch caused uneasiness and surprise here. The Japanese newspapers sent representatives to Mr. Taft, who immediately said he would give a reply in his speech tonight.

"The purpose of the meeting is for a general discussion of anti-trust laws, railroad rate regulation and state rights, and it is deemed probable that a permanent organization will be effected. The sessions will be concluded tomorrow evening.

JEKYLL AND HYDE" MAN IS ON TRIAL FOR MURDER Dr. Rowland of North Carolina and Wife Accused of Slaying the Woman's Former Husband

By Associated Press. RALEIGH, N. C., Sept. 30.—A murder trial of widespread interest was begun here today when Dr. Thomas L. Rowland and his second wife, the widow of Charles R. Strange, a locomotive engineer, faced the charge of having murdered Strange by poison so that they might wed.

Efforts will be made to prove that Dr. Rowland was a "Dr. Jekyll" and Mr. Hyde" in real life and that to all appearances he led an exemplary existence while secretly making a study of deadly poisons and plotting murders. He was even arrested on a charge of having poisoned his own child to get some insurance money, but he was let go because the chemists could find no trace of poison in the tests which they made.

NEW ORLEANS STRIKE MAY INVOLVE 8000 Longshoremen and Teamsters Walk Out When Employing Companies Fail to Make Agreement

By Associated Press. NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 30.—About 800 longshoremen and teamsters went on a strike here on the river front today when the crews of the Leland and the American line started stowing cotton in vessels. The strike was expected, the steamship agents having failed to make an agreement with the cotton crew men.

Other union laborers besides the crew men, longshoremen and teamsters are interested and it is probable that 8000 men representing practically every class of labor along the river will become involved.
