AGED MILLIONAIRE SEEKS SON'S SLAYER

BRINGS SUIT FOR $50,000 AGAINST ATTORNEY

Father Believes Lawyer Possesses Evidence Which Would Lead to Capture of Assassin of His Boy

NEW YORK, June 28.—In a further effort to publicly reveal the identity of his son's slayer, Henry Dexter, 96 years old, multi-millionaire and former president of the American News company, has brought suit in the supreme court here against John H. Badger, an attorney at Malone, N. Y.

Mr. Dexter alleges that he turned over to Badger $50,000 of the American News company stock on Badger's representation that he knew who shot and killed Orlando P. Dexter on his father's enormous estate.

Mr. Dexter relates that he gave this stock believing that Badger could establish the slayer's identity—a belief that he still entertains.

Mr. Dexter believes that Badger could establish the slayer's identity—a belief that he still entertains.

Orlando P. Dexter was a victim of the feud which had existed for many years between the owners of great hunting estates in the Adirondacks and the residents of that neighborhood.

Since Orlando Dexter's murder his father has had a standing reward of $100,000 for the conviction of the slayer, and has spent a large fortune in seeking evidence.

Cooking for Children

By Emma E. Pirie, Supervisor Domestic Science, San Antonio Public Schools. In preparing food for young children the method of cooking is very important. The digestion of a child is not so strong as that of a grown person, and over or under cooking or an excess of fat or condiments is more apt to cause derangements.

Children that have begun to take solid food are in many cases allowed to come to the family table. This does not necessarily mean that they should partake of the food prepared for adults; their needs should be considered and proper food prepared for them. The following recipes carry out the principles underlying the cooking of their various ingredients. It must be borne in mind that all cereals require long cooking on account of the starch that they contain. Starch, if thoroughly cooked, is partially digested, and thus less of a tax on the digestive organs. This is an important factor in the diet of children. MILK, meat and eggs should be lightly cooked, as the proteids are hardened by the heat. Meat must be heated sufficiently, however, to destroy any parasites that may infest it. The fibers of meat should not be given to young children; use only the juice. For the older child meat pulp is good. Meat is a valuable addition to the diet and should not be omitted. Fruits should be cooked unless well ripened. Rub the pulp through a sieve after cooking and sweeten lightly. Never sweeten while cooking.

Oat Jelly Sontk one-half cup of coarse oatmeal in one quart of water over night, turn into a double boiler, steam from four to six hours, replenishing with hot water if needed. There should be a pint when it is done. Strain through a cheese cloth, and put in a mold; keep on ice. It may be used to dilute the milk by melting it when ready to serve, or may be used as a cheese cloth, turning out of hot water into a mold; keep on ice. It may be used to dilute the milk by melting it when ready to serve, or may be used as a cheese cloth, turning out of hot water into a mold; keep on ice.

Arrowroot Gruel One tablespoon of arrowroot, one-half teaspoon of salt, one cup of boiling water, one cup of milk. Put the arrowroot in a small double boiler, add the arrowroot rubbed to a paste with a little cold water. Put directly over the fire and boil ten minutes, stirring constantly. Remove from the fire, and the milk put the kettle over the lower part of the boiler, which should be one-third full of boiling water. Set the whole over the fire and let it steam for ten minutes; add the salt and strain through a sieve. Keep very cool. It may be reheated when ready to serve. Arrowroot is astringent in action and is useful in cases of diarrhoea.

Peptonized Milk Peptonized milk is useful temporarily for young infants and in cases of intestinal disturbance. Tablets may usually be obtained with directions for use. The quantity required for one pint of food is one tablet containing fifteen grains bicarbonate of soda and one tablet containing one or one-third of a tablet is used to a pint of food. Unless the milk is to be heated afterward in order to destroy the ferment it is best to prepare only a little milk at a time and use it immediately. To prepare the milk, dissolve the tablet in one-half cup of cold water, add one and one-half cups of milk, using the upper part of a sieve. Fill the lower part with water at a temperature of 115 degrees Fahrenheit, or as warm as the hand can bear comfortably. Cover and let stand for two minutes. Cool quickly and keep on ice. To

GREEN THINGS GROWING

Everyone loves a garden, whether it be only the small enclosure of turf and side beds of a suburban villa or the luxuriant sweetness and space of a country garden.

Of course, the first thing to study in any garden is the needful watering of the plants, and few amateur gardeners know that in the spring, autumn and winter the water used should be some degrees warmer than the atmosphere where the plants live, and at the chilly seasons of the year watering operations are best done in the morning; it is only after a hot summer's day that the plants are best refreshed in the evening, and rainwater is the ideal water to employ.

A good housekeeper should appropriate a little corner in the garden for herb growing. Apart from their homely sweetness, herbs are invaluable in the kitchen, for chervil, fennel, marjoram, mint, parsley, sage, tarragon and thyme, with its orange and lemon varieties all play important parts in garnishing and seasoning. Although fresh herbs are naturally better than dried, still dried herbs are not to be despised. To dry herbs put them, when gathered, into clean white paper bags, which should be so tied as to exclude air, and hang them up till required; some people reduce the leaves to powder, dry and keep the pulverized herbs in closely corked bottles.

Now that the country beckons holiday-making city dwellers, the garden never gathered, into clean white paper bags, which should be so tied as to exclude air, and hang them up till required; some people reduce the leaves to powder, dry and keep the pulverized herbs in closely corked bottles.

When the garden possesses a well-nourished light soil it will make an ideal home for the floral passion, which was first discovered in Peru by the Spaniards, and takes its name from its likeness to the emblems of our Lord's crucifixion. The crown of thorns, the five antlers are in the five wounds, three styles show the nails and hammer, scourge and lance are five petals are typical of the ten faithful apostles, Judas and the Impulsive St. Peter being deemed unworthy of a place in the mystic passion flower.

Of course it stands to reason that there are people who do not possess even a tiny garden, and these unfortunate friends should remember this and sometimes send a few fragrant messengers to convey a memory of their pleasant surroundings. When the sun is on them, and they should be placed in a wooden box on a bed of flat leaves; the heaviest flowers, which are the most fragile ones last, but as tin and cardboard boxes prevent flowers retaining their pristine freshness on arrival, a wooden box is always preferable.

DRESS ON THE FRENCH STYLE From the dress point of view the first night of "Les Melleurs des Femmes, au Vaudeville," was something of a surprise. The new gowns wholly lacked any original features, and the same time some of them were marked with enough originality and grace to satisfy a delicate taste.

Very simple was a Pannin gown of tan cashmere, laid underfoot and in the role as a young girl. The round waist dropped a little in front by means of a narrow shaped piece of the material. Across it a large, direct, straight such lovely Marguerite Bressl wore a Cheruit dinner gown of tea rose, satin finished, crepe. The corsage was draped with gold braid bretelles, having somewhat of a ruche over a chinchilla or rose tulle. A close-hung tunic of the crepe was made still tighter by being tied half-way down the skirt at the back by a ribbon bow with fringed bands. The tunic was deeply hemmed with heavy embroidery, in the same tone, and a little of the same embroidery showed on the bodice in the space between the bretelles. The round belt, very narrow, was the braid also.—Paris Letter to Vogue.

PORCH SCREENS OF BEANS If you have a sunny back porch which you want to screen off with vines, why not try beans? The vines make rapid growth. If the seed is sown in rich soil as possible by adding well rotted manure, rich mold, etc. Plant the seed, eye down, in a perfectly straight row, the seeds being planted about two inches apart. Drive pegs into the ground at the ends of the rows and run small wires across from peg to peg. Run strings up from the wires to a convenient height on the porch and train the vines up on these strings. Keep the plants well watered and cultivated, and they will completely shelter the porch, besides furnishing lots of snap beans for use. Of course, it need not be said that "pole" beans are the sort to plant.

BAKED CORN Green corn baked in pepper pods is very delicious. Clean the peppers, free each from seed and fill with green corn cut from the cobs. Add plenty of butter, salt and pepper. The shells should be about two-thirds full, then filled with rich cream and served. Bake them in muffin pans, which will keep them apart and hold the peppers while baking.
