THE HERALD Is the Best Newspaper in Los Angeles

This statement is fully supported by 23,000 subscribers daily. There is a reason for the phenomenal growth of The Herald in the recent past, and for the continued increase in its circulation. Its columns are clean, filled with real news free from "padding" and sensationalism. The Associated Press service complete and is unequaled by any other newsgathering organization in the world. The increase of The Herald's circulation is largely due to the number of feature writers, each and every one a specialist in the field he covers; among them may be mentioned:

George B. Harrison

National affairs and general Eastern comment. That whom there is none better posted on matters pertaining to the development of the San Pedro and Wilmington harbors and Greater Los Angeles development.

Frederic J. Haskin

National affairs and general Eastern comment. The clever cartoonist on The Herald staff, has gained an enviable reputation on the Pacific coast, and his cartoons are always original and executed in a manner that requires no diagram to see the point he wishes to express.

D. W. Semple

The Auto expert, who, with full knowledge of the various "joy" machines, is a driver of no mean ability. His articles are read with interest, not because of flowing style, but rather the truth in regard to matters pertaining to the motor world.

C. D. Barnett

The clever cartoonist on The Herald staff, has gained an enviable reputation on the Pacific coast, and his cartoons are always original and executed in a manner that requires no diagram to see the point he wishes to express.

Chas. Jernegan

Delights in knocking out hot liners for the ball fans, and his "stuff" meets with ready acceptance from exacting readers.

A. E. Dunning

The sporting editor, is in a class by himself, assisted by experts. His page is one eagerly read by all, whether particularly interested in athletics or not.

Florence Bosard Lawrence

"Aunt Laurie," is doing a worthy work: as the editor of the Herald Junior League Supplement. Pages of her section are filled with heart interest to a constantly increasing number of little folk banded together for general good. This feature of The Herald is one that appeals to the mothers, because it has for its object the uplifting of the youth of Los Angeles through the members of the Junior League.

Herbert Blake

Celebrated dramatic critic, needs no introduction to the people of Los Angeles. His criticisms are fair in every line and are fully appreciated by the local managers and the theater-going public. Mr. Blake writes in a distinctive style which appeals strongly to those who analyze closely.

Mrs. M. N. Bridgman

assisted by Miss Jean Bridgman, edits the woman's page and society section in a manner free from the vapid utterances of the ordinary society news writer. If there is an element of news interest in anything that pertains to the social life of Los Angeles it will be found in the columns under Mrs. Bridgman's supervision.

James Wynkoop

Edits the real estate and mining section of The Herald, and his articles are read because of the truth contained in each and every one. Mr. Wynkoop is not a native of Missouri, but requires to be "shown" on all matters that pertain to his section of the paper.

Together with the above mentioned special writers, a corps of reporters and correspondents are on the go continually, and the columns of The Herald daily speak for their energy in the news field. The Herald is being delivered at the homes of subscribers at the very low price of forty cents per month. It is "the paper fit for homes."
