WITH THE AUTOISTS

PATROL, FIRE, AMBULANCES

HORSE DRAWN VEHICLES MUST GIVE WAY TO CARS

White Steam and Gas Cars Shown by Actual Tests to Be Operated at the Minimum Rate

The fact that auto ambulances, patrols and fire appliances are gaining in popularity and the assurance that they are a marked improvement over similar vehicles of the horse-drawn variety is demonstrated by the adoption of them by the government and various municipal authorities.

The advantages of the auto are so clearly defined that a great many municipalities have either contracted for, or are seriously considering installing, a motor car of whichever class of public service vehicle they may need most.

At Lansing, Mich., it is claimed that a motor fire engine has responded to seventy-one alarms in 136 days, at a total cost of only $24.81.

A second automobile patrol has already been put into service by the Indianapolis police department.

The Philadelphia General hospital, thirty-fourth and Pine streets, Philadelphia, Pa., is now using two self-propelled ambulances. These cars are White Steamers, with regular stock motor chassis, and have special bodies built according to specifications.

The first car was purchased in the latter part of 1905, and has been in continuous service both night and day until about four months ago, when night service was discontinued. It is a "Model P" 18-horsepower stock chassis. The car itself weighs about 3500 pounds, and loaded to its capacity will weigh close to 5000 pounds.

The other car is a standard model chassis, having a 30-horsepower motor, and was purchased in 1908 at a cost of $4500.

The cars are both giving entire satisfaction. With the first car there was very little mechanical trouble, and that was caused mostly by the abuse of the car received due to the inexperience of the operator.

With the 1908 model "K" 30-horsepower, there has been no mechanical trouble whatever. Neither car has experienced any tire trouble, and, in fact, nor has ever been tied up on the road.

The hospital authorities claim the steam ambulance is much more efficient for hospital use than the motor makes on account of the easy riding qualities possessed and the lack of noise and vibration. Either car will do the work of three horse-drawn vehicles. Such minor repairs as have been necessary are made by the chauffeurs, and even in the case of overhauling, when the heavy machinery was taken out and repaired, the car was taken to a shop and the work done there by the operators.

The first cost of the two cars was $7700. These two cars displace six pairs of horses which at the present average cost of $500 per pair, would amount to $3000. The cost of six ambulances would be about $7500. This gives a total for the horse-drawn vehicles displaced by the ambulances, of $5700. That figure, however, cannot be compared to the cost of the motor cars, as the motor cars were both night and day, while the six pairs of horses would not give a continuous hospital service of even a day. To make a fair comparison of cost one must estimate on the horse-drawn vehicles displaced by the ambulances, of $5700. That figure, however, cannot be compared to the cost of the motor cars, as the motor cars were both night and day, while the six pairs of horses would not give a continuous hospital service of even a day.

These cars make as high as 120 miles apiece on some days, and average about eighty miles per day, which, together with the other advantages they have over horse-drawn ambulances, give such satisfaction that the hospital authorities say, that were it possible, at this time, they would do away with the horse-drawn ambulances altogether.
