BODIES OF 300 MINERS MAY BE SOON CREMATED

FEELING AT CHERRY, ILL., IS THREATENING

EXPERTS ARE DENOUNCED FOR SEALING SHAFT

Troops Guard Mine Owners and Little Effort Is Made to Recover Corpses from Furnace

CHERRY, Ill., Nov. 17.—For the first time since Sunday two men tonight descended the ventilating shaft of the St. Paul mine in the blocked and fiery galleries of which more than 300 men and boys lie dead.

The explosion was successfully carried out by Morris and E. Y. Williams of the United States geological survey. They were nearly exhausted when hauled to the top but quickly revived under the administration of stimulants.

From what they discovered it is believed that the fire has moved back from the main shaft and that it may be possible to enter it soon.

(By Associated Press.) CHERRY, Ill., Nov. 17.—After claiming them for four days, the St. Paul coal mine, in which are entombed the bodies of 300 or more miners as a result of Saturday's disaster, today refused to yield up its dead.

Utter failure to devise any satisfactory method of recovering the bodies altered the mood of the miners.

Tonight the interior of the mine was burning almost as fiercely as ever, the lifting of the seal over the mouth of the hoisting shaft, following a frequent puff of smoke the fury of smothered flames.

While the two companies of state troops sent here to prevent possible disorder remained idle in their cars, except for guard duty about the mine and sleeping cars at night, an important conference lasting five hours was held.

Federal, state and local mining experts were present. The meeting was called in response to a feeling that efforts should be made to penetrate the mine and bring up the bodies as far as hazards. But at its conclusion, it was found that no immediate descent could be made into the gas and heat-filled cavern, without risk of killing the rescuers.

The conference was attended by President A. J. Earling of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, George S. Rice of Pittsburgh, of the United States geological survey; J. W. Paul, in charge of the government mine rescue work, and many mine inspectors.

Have Many Schemes Various schemes were proposed. Among them was one to open up an air shaft, distant from the hoisting shaft, which hitherto has been worked, and by means of a giant fan, produce a false air current that would carry the gas and heat away from the shaft down which it was intended to send the rescuers.

Some of those who opposed this declared the entire project for rescue would have to be indefinitely postponed.

Others asserted the internal fires were intense, that it would be useless to risk more lives, and that, in fact, the mine would have to be sealed up for weeks and possibly for months before the men could be safely recovered.

Scores of women continue to linger about the ground. So great has been the mental strain the last four days, it is feared, that some of them are on the verge of insanity. One woman, who declared she had had dreams and visions of her husband and brother still living in the mine, pitifully implored the officials to open the shaft, and then fell in a senseless heap.

Determined to show the people that everything possible was being done, authorities opened the company's grounds and allowed crowds to gather near the shaft.

Details Announced Details of what was being done were announced. An Mining Engineers' union, which had been through a bore into the lid of the shaft to test the degree of heat another man announced through a megaphone:

"One hundred and fourteen degrees near the top."

Mr. Rice lowered the thermometer the 300 feet of the shaft, and a moment later the voice rang out through the megaphone:

"One hundred and seven degrees at the bottom."

"Why," cried a chorus of voices, "that's good; they can go down in that. We can stand 114 degrees in the sun; surely they'll go down in that."

But this burst of confidence was soon destroyed.

It was explained that owing to the gas in the mine, oxygen helmets would have to be worn by the rescuers, and that a much lower degree of temperature than that in ordinary conditions necessary for those who wore helmets. Moreover, it was said, if the seal were opened, the mine would be flooded with fire, and before the rescuers could get down flames might be leaping high.

"If the fire continues will the bodies ever be recovered?" was asked on all sides when it became known that a plan to seal up the mine for weeks or months had been proposed.

Have Done Everything "We have gone over every detail of the situation," said Commissioner Traer of the investigating board. "We have pondered over the maps of the mine—we have heard the opinion and advice of everyone who is familiar with the mine. Our only thought is to get out the bodies if it is within human power. That's all we can look forward to."

The order for troops to guard the string of sleeping cars and the private car of President Earling was given by Sheriff Skoglund after repeated rumors that plotters would blow up the train. Late in the day it became known that another company of militia is in reserve at Monmouth, ready for any emergency.

Demonstration of the feeling on the part of the survivors created much uneasiness among mine officials, experts, charity workers and others who have business here.

This led Sheriff Skoglund to take immediate action, and at dusk he asked the railroad officials to move the troop cars, stationed several hundred feet from the mine, up beside the special cars which are serving as a temporary hotel.

"I want to assure everyone who has any fear for his safety that he will be protected," said the sheriff. "Regarding rumors of threats of secret society meetings and such things of alarming nature, I have nothing to say."

Actress Denies Engagement to Nephew of Japanese Emperor

other scheme and this she stated yesterday. "I expect to begin next week to ride horseback and exercise in other ways to keep my flesh down. I was afraid that this climate will make me stout. I am very fond of tennis and golf and I hope to play a great deal while I am here. I am also very fond of motoring and had my first ride here yesterday. You know we exercise every day by going to the postoffice after our mail."

Miss Russell admitted that there was no man in sight that she knew she was going to be married to and the Japanese prince the least of all. "But one can never tell," she added, "there may be some one I may meet out here that I may marry," but she quickly added that she said it only in a joking spirit and that she had come west merely for rest and to enjoy the climate, provided it did not have a tendency to make her stout.

Miss Russell expressed a dislike for the stage, saying that vaudeville was especially hard, as one had to devote the entire time to it, working both night and day. "The life is rather hard," she said, "and one gets tired of the hotels and the same old life over again every day, week in and week out. You know, it seems good to get away from it all and we are so happy here in this pretty bungalow which is so homelike and cozy," and she brought out a beautiful picture of her mother which she had just received from Boston, where she is staying in "The Widow's Mite."

Miss Russell is keeping a memory book with newspaper clippings, pictures and items published about her. She takes great delight in it and exhibited it proudly. "Next week I am going to have a piano moved in and then I will be able to play and practice again. I might possibly take a theatrical engagement while I am out here to keep me busy. I was to have gone on with Joseph Brooks in the "Inner Shores" the first of this week, but that is not ready, and I have some time at my disposal."

Mr. Hyde. Californian Invents and Flies in New Monoplane

EUREKA, Cal., Nov. 17.—Blaine Solvage, a young mechanic of this city, in a monoplane of his own construction, made a trial flight this evening of three-fourths of a mile at an average height of three feet, in one minute and a half.

Solvage has been at work on his monoplane for more than a year. He not only constructed the machine, which is built on the monoplane model, unassisted, but even made himself the 20-horse power four-cylinder engine with which it is driven.

The ambitious young mechanic says he has perfected steering and balancing devices which are entirely new and considers them an improvement over those used by other aviators. In his next flight he plans to fly over the city.

Solvage stated tonight that he expects to take his aeroplane to Los Angeles to try for a prize offered in that city.
