LORDS SURE TO REFORM HOUSE

ORGANIZATION OF PEERS IS PRACTICAL

SPEAKER DEcriES ATTITUDE OF BRITISH PRESS

Declares Lords, No Matter What Their Ability, Are Attacked With-out Sufficient War-rant

LONDON, Feb. 20.—In an interview with a representative of the Morning Post one of the most prominent hereditary peers of the kingdom outlines the position of the house of lords as follows:

That some change in the composition of the house of lords is necessary and will take place there is now but little doubt. Whether the change will be reform in the beneficial sense is not so sure.

The assembly which is so much abused and into which advance is so eagerly sought after, especially by the followers of its chief detractors, is possibly in theory far from perfect, yet it found favor with Cromwell, and in debate it will be found that practically no member of their lordships' house speaks unless he has, or should have, special knowledge of the matter under discussion, though of course a party, weak in numbers and in debating ability, may be forced to "put up" a speaker whose qualifications to discuss on a subject are not overwhelming. In divisions, although both sides on important occasions bring up their can, their reserves, the floodings and those who seldom attend, yet what difference do these generally make beyond swelling the figures on both sides?

A youthful peer, taking a slight or possibly keen interest in the affairs of the nation, immediately comes under the lash of the radical scribes; all their vituperation and abuse are heaped upon him, and I cannot recall to mind that the Unionist press often takes his part. On the other hand, a youthful member of the house of commons, who is looked upon as a prodigy, although his experience of the world is very likely of the two men the smaller, and his presence in the house of commons is hereditary due to heredity. Of the two houses for a young man to make a name in without influence the house of lords is undoubtedly the better.

For the house of commons, especially the last house, to set itself on a pinnacle of righteousness, to maintain that its proposals can do no wrong, is nothing less than adamant effort. The number of members of the Radical and Labor, or to use a shorter term, semi-radical party, who sit in the last parliament, or who will sit in the next, who have not used theological inexactitudes about Chinese slavery, dear food, German war expenditure, or the poor law, will not be very large, and although the upper house may not be without its sheep of dusky hue, its members who are in the habit of attending its sittings and serving on committees, and many who do neither, need have little fear if a comparison is to be made of the component parts of the two houses.

Even in this age of lack of veneration of anything, when for purposes of self advertisement or to gain votes any inexactitude is indulged in, and even a cockshy is made of anything and anyone, is it too much to expect that, for instance, a student of science should not be able to give an account of the services of Lord Rayleigh or the late Lord Kelvin; a subaltern for Lords Roberts or Wolsey; a struggling journalist for Lord Morley or Milner; a diplomat for Lord Lansdowne, Lord Cromer or Lord Curzon?

Again, a young aspirant for law honours might even now hesitate before sneering at the lord chancellor, the lord chief justice or Lord Halsbury; a bank clerk may even be expected to know something of the opinions of Lords Rothschild and Rowletstone, any tyro in finance would resent that the name of Rothschild or Baring on a prospectus stamps it immediately as gilt-edged. Even at the opening of parliament not long ago Lord Lansdowne chaffed the leader of the house for choosing to charter some closely connected with the iron and shipbuilding trades to propose and second the address to the throne. Is it possible that we are to look to Canada alone for an appreciation of the services of Lords Strathcona and Mount Stephen? It would be easy to continue in the same strain and with other striking examples.
