SANTA MONICA

BALL OF FIRE HOVERS ABOVE SANTA MONICA

Many Persons View Phenomenon Believed to Have Been Due to Some Electric Cause

SANTA MONICA, March 19.—What is thought to have been an electrical phenomenon was witnessed here last night by several persons when a huge red ball of fire was seen floating in the air in the northern part of the city not more than fifty feet above the ground.

According to Policeman Jake Woods, who first discovered the ball, it was about a foot in diameter. Woods says the ball hovered in the air for five seconds, then suddenly split in two pieces. One of the latter moved about one-half mile out to sea and disappeared in the water, while the other sailed northward toward the Santa Monica mountains and was finally lost to sight in the distance.

At the time of the appearance of the ball there was a slight fog, but there was no trace of a storm or accompanying electrical disturbance. Those who saw the ball of fire declare it to have been an "electrical ball," such as have been reported in various parts of the country.

-The new Bungalow Rugs at Barker Bros. solve the question of really beautiful floor coverings at moderate cost

—in keeping with the artistic Mission furniture so universally popular in the furnishing of California homes, and with the dainty Colonial styles which are also found in so many of our modern residences, the new Bungalow Rugs fill a long felt void, being not only created with the idea of harmonizing perfectly with the furniture, but also to supply really artistic floor coverings at a cost so moderate as to be well within the means of all whose taste inclines toward the really beautiful instead of that which is merely "showy."

—In our illustration is shown the beautiful effect obtained in a combination of the famous L. & J. G. Stickley famed oak mission furniture and the harmonious bungalow rugs—in all essentials artistic and practical.

These new Bungalow Rugs come in a number of various weaves—all wool, wool and fiber, and fiber—in a wide range of colors and designs, and in sizes to meet practically every demand in the floor covering of a complete bungalow. The patterns found in the small 30x60 inch sizes are duplicated in the larger rugs, some of them in the largest ordinarily wanted large-room sizes, 12x15 feet. Most of them are reversible, and of such texture as to be particularly desirable from sanitary standards, being easily and thoroughly cleanable.

—The Kilmarnock and Lanark lines, of very heavy wool, suggest the genuine old-time three-ply Scotch art rugs; these are suitable for general use in all rooms. The Seminole line closely resembles the Navajo Indian rugs; the Kaba line are particularly suitable alike for living, dining rooms and bedrooms. The Hosi line, of fiber matting, are made in rich shades of blue, tan, brown, green, etc., and are mostly in geometrical patterns. Then there are the Poster rugs, typical Colonial "rag rugs," in light and dainty colors, especially pleasing for bedroom use. In the various weaves and styles there is ample opportunity to make selections which will harmonize with almost any furniture scheme one may decide upon. The popular prices at which these rugs may be purchased place them in a position of preference with all who desire really artistic floor coverings and yet do not wish to make extravagant outlay.

We are the only firm in the city making a specialty of these new rugs, and therefore it will be well to arrange to see them here before deciding the floor covering question.
