Mrs. Mai Schreiner, Encouraged by One Who Had Faced Death, Takes Heart and Is Now Well and Happy

"If you could only know how sick I have been for years, many years, so ill that often I could not keep even a spoonful of water on my stomach, and how well I am now, you would not wonder at my gratitude toward the man who cured me," said Mrs. Mai Schreiner at 2350 Humboldt street, Denver, Colo.

"I was really at death's door for years. I tried osteopathy, massage, doctors—at one time I actually had twenty bottles of medicine in my room at once. Never an hour of the day that I was not drugged with one or another kind of stuff. Sometimes it stimulated me for a little; oftener it merely made my stomach more sore and tender."

other column of this page, to continue her quest for health until she was finally restored, is Mrs. Emma L. Carpenter of 3863 Tennyson street. It was an account of Mrs. Carpenter's own marvelous recovery, printed several weeks ago in the News, which led Mrs. Schreiner to call on her and inquire whether the story is true, and whether there really was hope for herself.

Mrs. Carpenter's recovery after she had been given up to die is no less astonishing—and no less true—than that of Mrs. Schreiner. And that it was genuine and permanent is shown in the fact that she was cured six years ago, and today is strong, healthy and happy, and ready and willing at all times to tell anyone how she regained her health when the last hope had gone.

E. H. ALLISON, an Original Telecon Man

"My husband finally decided that he would take me to California in the hope that the climate there might help me. I was dreadfully thin, and so weak that I could scarcely walk. My nerves were in such a dreadful state that I could not control myself at all. One minute I would be laughing at nothing at all; the next I would be crying and screaming with just as little cause."

"Before we were ready to start for the coast the doctors advised Mr. Schreiner not to start with me, for the chances were that I would die on the way. But I was doing no good here, and I was so miserable that I had to leave as fast as I could, if there were no relief from that terrible pain and awful nervous spells that came on oftener and oftener as the disease progressed."

"Well, we made the trip, though I did come near fulfilling the doctors' prediction and dying on the way. I was in such a state when we reached Los Angeles that I felt senseless on the platform of the station when we left the train, and had to be hauled away in an ambulance."

14 Months of Suffering

"There followed fourteen months of just the same agony. Fourteen months of slim diet and medicine, and suffering, and nervousness and fear, until finally my husband brought me back home. I suppose I was really brought home to die, and I did not much care. All that year and two months of pain and suffering and lack of nourishment had weakened me so much that I could not walk alone when we reached Denver, but had to be almost carried to the cab from the train shed."

"I was just dying by inches, that's what I was, and I knew it, and gave up all hope. So one day when Mr. Schreiner came to me with a copy of the News and tried to tell me of a new treatment that had cured a case just like mine, and as bad, I would not listen to him."

"Don't try to tell me about some new doctor," I cried. "I've seen the last doctor I ever want to see. I've taken medicine and paid bills all these years, and look where it has left me."

Go Ask the Patient

"Then we won't go near him," replied my husband. "We will just go over by Elitch's gardens and see this Mrs. Carpenter, who was cured. Let's go and ask her whether it is true, or just a story made up."

"I finally agreed to that, and we drove over. I was so sick that I was hardly able to hold up my head. I almost collapsed when we got inside the house, but I was still able to sit up and speak. I remember that I had on a thick, heavy veil, and I would not take it off, because I was ashamed that she should see my yellow skin, my bony face and the circles under my eyes."

"I told her right straight what we had come for. I said: 'Mrs. Carpenter, I am a very sick woman and I want you to tell me truly whether you were cured, and whether there is hope for me.'"

Won Her Sympathy

"You just ought to have seen the sympathy and the gladness in Mrs. Carpenter's face. It does one good to look at her anyway, she is so well and strong and cheerful, but she knew so well how I felt, could remember so distinctly when she had been right where I was then, that she felt very sorry for me. At the same time she was glad, for she was so certain that I could be cured."

"So she sat right there and told me the whole story of her sickness back in Salina, Kas., six years ago. How five of the best doctors had given her up to die, and none of her friends thought she could live a week. She was even worse off than I, for she was bedridden for months, while I was still able to drag around. She told me the whole story, how her sister had read in a paper of a cure in a neighboring town, brought by Telecon, and how she had sent her sister to beg the practitioner to come and see whether there was any hope for her."

"And the marvelous part of the story was that after one treatment she sat up in bed and ate a hearty meal, something she had not done for months. When she told me that and I assured me that it was all true, just as I had read it in the News, I determined to try this new treatment myself."

Has Gained 18 Pounds

"Well, there is no need to say much more about me now. I have been taking treatments only a few weeks, but I have gained eighteen pounds, I walk whenever and wherever I choose, I eat anything and everything I want, and nothing hurts me; I am gaining strength every day—I am well."

Mrs. Schreiner actually shed tears of joy as she told of her restored health after so many years of suffering, despair and finally resignation to the death which seemed inevitable.

"I do not like publicity, and I shrink from having my name in the newspapers under any circumstances, but I feel that it would be the basest ingratitude if I should fail to tell everyone I can what a cure has been wrought on me by Telecon. I cannot find words to express my gratitude, the joy I feel at being restored to life and health and happiness, after I had given up every hope. It was simply a reprieve at the last moment, when I was about to die."

"I am telling every one of my friends, just as fast as I can see them. I am telling you, that the readers of the News may know it. And if any sick persons wish to ask me personally of the truth of the story, I live at 2350 Humboldt street, and my telephone number is York 3348. I will be only too glad to talk to anyone who is in the condition from which I was rescued, and tell them that there is health and happiness only a few weeks away if they will follow the way I took."

Her Looks Prove It

Mrs. Schreiner's personal appearance bears out every claim she makes to restored health. There is a healthy glow on her cheek, her eyes are bright, she moves with springy step and the ease and grace of young womanhood, and, above all, there is a light in her face and a ring of earnestness in her voice that tell the story of renewed health and hope.

Six Years Ago Five Doctors Gave Her Up as Incurable

The Denver woman who encouraged Mrs. Mai Schreiner, as related in another column of this page, to continue her quest for health until she was finally restored, is Mrs. Emma L. Carpenter of 3863 Tennyson street. It was an account of Mrs. Carpenter's own marvelous recovery, printed several weeks ago in the News, which led Mrs. Schreiner to call on her and inquire whether the story is true, and whether there really was hope for herself.

Whence Comes This Mysterious Power?

A man of a scientific turn of mind called to see the Telecon man. He was mystified at the results produced with Telecon, the drugless treatment. No knife used. No blood drawn. No drugs used—and yet they were curing of diseases and complaints. After much serious thought he finally decides that, in addition to a knowledge of Anatomy, Physiology, Pathology, etc., that they were also possessed of what he was pleased to term a GOD-given power, which the average individual does not possess. He said he found them to be big, brave and hopeful, and were the kind that inspired hope and confidence in the sick and suffering.

Company are open this week to those who wish to take advantage of this modern treatment.
