Los Angeles district of the Federation of Women's clubs will have its annual meeting the third week in November in Los Angeles. The meeting probably will be held at one of the large club houses, either the Friday Morning or the Ebell. This decision was reached at the meeting of the district executive board yesterday. Another interesting feature of this board meeting was the indorsement by the board of the report of the health committee of the Friday Morning club, Mrs. Charles Farwell Edson, chairman of that committee, was present at the board meeting, and it was after listening to an address by her that the action was taken.

Reports were received from the chairmen of the various committees, Mrs. L. C. Torrence, child labor; Mrs. L. A. Moore, legislative; Miss Bertha C. Moore, civics; Mrs. F. M. Douglas, library and law books, and Mrs. Calvin Hartwell, health.

The chairman of household economy was announced, Mrs. A. Blackburn, Mrs. Russell J. Waters was present and outlined her policy with regard to the state federation for this year. She said clubs would be asked to work more directly through their districts, and that each club would be allowed to specialize in some one thing rather than taking up all the branches of work recommended by the general federation.

Mrs. Oliver C. Bryant, who was toastmaster, utilized this same topic, the seven ages of man, most uniquely and cleverly in arranging the program. The general subject was an autobiography of the famous seven ages of man speech, which is actually acted in the play, but served well in this particular place as a suitable finale for the production.

Mrs. E. H. Bryant, who was toastmaster, utilized this same topic, the seven ages of man, most uniquely and cleverly in arranging the program. The general subject was an autobiography of the famous seven ages of man speech, which is actually acted in the play, but served well in this particular place as a suitable finale for the production.

The first, "The Babe in Arms," was most tenderly spoken by Mrs. J. S. Thayer. She actually referred more to the mother of this club, Kate Tupper Galpin, than to the infant club, although that, too, and the careful nursing it received from the founder, came under her subject.

Mrs. Egelhoff-Rundel had the "Whining Schoolboy" period for her topic, and told some most amusing and interesting stories of the early days of the club, its trials, vicissitudes and joys.

Mrs. R. H. F. Variel spoke to the "Lover," and took for that period the regime of Mrs. Rice, who has made the club beloved of all others by her constant interest and association with other clubs, both here and in the surrounding towns. She closed this with a direct toast to Mrs. Rice.

For "The Soldier," Mrs. Rice, the outgoing president, responded, giving the toast to Mrs. E. H. Barmore, who takes the guidance of the club for the next year, and who will have work to do for the club.

"The Justice," the great, broad, comfortable period is one which is to come, and for this Miss Galpin gave the response and toasted Mrs. Mary Moore Grigg, through whose leadership the new members come, those who will make for the strength and vigor of the club.

In responding to "The Grandfather" period, Mrs. C. S. Ward spoke to the oldest members, gave a delightful prophecy, foretelling the time when the present members should be scattered, each in her turn founding a Shakespeare club in her own neighborhood, and all returning yearly for great meetings of the Shakespeare federations.

Mrs. George Rice gave the last period, the "Mere Oblivion," with a witty treatment, in which she suggested the fact that women who have accomplished good things in this world can never be laid away, but constantly rise to action and power. Mrs. Barmore closed the program. The papers which preceded the play were on "Our Shakespeare of Today," a treatise of the writer as philosopher, scientist and humanitarian, Miss Tillston, Mr. Galpin and Mrs. John Tucker giving most interesting discussions of the topics.

Luncheon was under the direction of Mrs. J. T. Fitzgerald, and was served on long tables in the court under a pergola roof, with vines and blooming plants.

The Indian Village was the scene of the most enjoyable party yesterday afternoon when the Southern California Women's Press club entertained with their annual picnic. Luncheon was served on the broad gallery and a large number of the members and their friends availed themselves of the opportunity to be together before the summer vacation. After the lunch the annual reports of the recording secretary and the treasurer were given and the installation of officers followed. The following are the officers for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. D. C. McCan; first vice president, Mrs. S.

A Woman Has a Lot to Thank a Whale For

When a whale's mouth is open his strips of whalebone hang from the upper gum straight down. When closed, the strips bend back as an elephant bends his trunk back. The whalebone bends back into a cavern at each side of the whale's tongue; thus the strips are constantly straightening and bending and straightening throughout the life of a whale.

And it never breaks nor wears out, even though always subjected to this never-ending bending, as well as to the great heat of the whale's body and to the ever-present dampness of the sea. That is why the heat and dampness of the human body do not injure whalebone. That's why whalebone readily conforms to the figure and as readily straightens out flat again when the corset is removed. It was devised by nature to do in a whale's mouth just what it does in a corset, bend and never stay bent—bend and bend and never break or wear out. And defy the heat and dampness of the body. Whalebone is peculiar stuff; nothing else like it in the world—either artificial or natural. Surely admirable stuff with which to stiffen a corset. And no substitute has ever been invented—whalebone has the inventive genius beaten. Whalebone is used in Redfern corsets because the makers want the Redfern to be the finest corset that money and genius and experience and conscientious work can make. And that is why few women ever wore Redfern corsets who didn't wear them again—who didn't wear them the balance of their lives. Not only that, but tell everybody else to wear a Redfern. You know it is human nature to recommend a thing which is particularly good or to condemn a thing which is particularly bad. Redfern wearers sell as many corsets as do Redfern makers. Whalebone IS scarce and hard to get; just as precious metals and diamonds are hard to get. But whatever the scarcity and whatever the price, Redfern corsets will always be stiffened with whalebone, because there is nothing else fit for a fine corset; and no woman who knows the art of dressing well will have anything but a whalebone corset—she'd have it if it cost $100. So a woman has an awful lot to thank a whale for.
