THE EIGHTH UNANIMOUS ELECTION OF DIAZ, by John Kenneth Turner, author of the recent remarkable series of articles in THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE entitled "Barbarous Mexico." Mr. Turner tells the story of the late so-called presidential campaign in Mexico, basing his article practically upon various happenings during that campaign, as reported by newspapers favorable to Diaz; in reality an enumeration of newspaper suppressions, banishments, assassinations and similar evidences of tyranny. The article is not "yellow," but calmly and fairly handles a subject that will not down, no matter how much the papers and periodicals of Mexico and the United States may be filled with laudatory articles on the career of President Diaz. You hear a great deal about the "necessity of despotic government in Mexico under present conditions," this even from certain citizens of the American Commonwealth of liberty, progress and constitutional government. But this is a matter to be determined by the Mexicans themselves. If they are worthy they will have liberty and constitutional government. The fact that a strong spirit of resistance to oppression is gradually gathering force in Mexico is not a matter to discourage friends of liberty anywhere; nor can any amount of sophistry ever make right a wrong. If President Diaz is obliged to maintain his power by tyrannical and despotic methods, by injustice and oppression, it is no part of an American publication's duty to overlook these facts, apologize for or defend them, notwithstanding the greatness of Diaz and his services to his country. Too much power, in the long run, is always abused. Is there an abuse of power in Mexico?

DUANDON, by George Sterling. This is, in our judgment, the best poem Mr. Sterling has yet written. It is unusually long for magazine publication, but lovers of verse everywhere will find no fault with it on that score. The nobility of its almost incomparable lines will give it rank, we believe, with the greatest work in the language. Mr. Sterling is an apostle of beauty in art, and throughout this poem is an extraordinary atmosphere of beauty, of melody, powerful in effect. This latest of Mr. Sterling's more ambitious work is entirely without obscurity, or excess of color, and woven through it is a weirdly fascinating story.

THE PASSING OF THE CALIFORNIA CATTLE BARONS, by Prof. J. M. Guinn, secretary of the Southern California Historical society, is the first of two very valuable and interesting contributions to California history. It is the story of the epoch about which little has been written, dealing with the struggles of the great land-grant holders to maintain themselves, and the final death blow to the cattle industry, during the period of the Civil War and the mining booms of Washoe and Idaho, and leading up to the great transition era in California, which is covered by the second article, FROM CATTLE RANGE TO ORANGE GROVE (to appear in October). The articles are illustrated from a number of rare pictures of historical interest.

MOUNT MCKINLEY AND THE MAZAMA EXPEDITION, by Gertrude Metcalfe, historian of the Mazamas, the famous mountain-climbing club of the Northwest. As announced in the July number The Pacific Monthly will publish a series of articles by Mr. C. E. Rusk, the leader of this expedition, who, by the time this magazine appears, will doubtless be on his return trip from the summit of McKinley. Miss Metcalfe's article gives the history of the mountain, and many interesting facts regarding Dr. Cook's attempts, and a more recent expedition to the mammoth mountain, and is a very interesting preliminary to Mr. Rusk's expected articles. Illustrated from very interesting photographs of the Cook expedition and Kiser pictures of the Mazamas taken en route.

A TRIP TO THE HUMAN ROOKERIES, by Capt. F. E. Kleinschmidt, the Alaskan hunter and traveler, graphically describes a visit to the remarkable native village on King's island, a bleak and lofty rock that thrusts out of the sea near the entrance to Bering Strait. Illustrated from photographs of the natives and their stilt-supported dwellings.

SAN FRANCISCO AND THE PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION, by James Henry MacLafferty, tells the story of San Francisco's splendid effort projecting a mammoth exposition to commemorate the completion of the Panama Canal.

Good stories, by well-known authors, will add strong fiction interest to this number.

ADMITS GUILTY IN FORGERY CASE; ASKS FOR PROBATION

Judge Davis of the criminal department of the superior court yesterday gave official attention to several minor cases. James Henry admitted his guilt in a forgery action and asked for probation, a hearing in the matter being set for next Tuesday. He passed a worthless check for $18 on the Central National bank. Stanford Lindley and Eugene Smart, accused of the burglary of the garage of C. L. Jacoby, 2949 Burlington Avenue, July 16, were arraigned. They will plead Monday. Joseph Murphy, who is accused of forging the name of an aqueduct workman on a check for $65, given in exchange for his labors, and cashing it at the German American Savings bank, will be tried August 29. F. W. Graeff, charged with passing a worthless check for $20 on the Bank of Southern California, was arraigned. He will enter his plea Wednesday. W. H. Smith, charged with assault with a deadly weapon upon Mrs. Pearl Grimm at Redondo Beach, July 4, alleges there are errors in the commitment by which he was held to answer to the superior court. An investigation of his allegation will be made August 24. J. A. Woodbury, accused of giving the Whitley Jewelry company a worthless check for $390 in payment for jewelry, will be tried November 10. Jacob Hartnagel, formerly a member of the Los Angeles police department and now charged with embezzlement, was arraigned. He will enter his plea August 30.

C. I. Lowry asked probation on a charge of burglary, being promised a hearing in the matter August 24. W. T. Rice, recently sentenced to serve two years in Folsom prison after being convicted of passing a worthless check, asked to be sent to San Quentin instead. His request was granted.

ASK $50,000 DAMAGES FOR LOSS OF WIFE'S AFFECTIONS

Charging alienation of the affections of his wife, George Langford yesterday filed in the superior court a suit against James Pettigrew for damages of $50,000. Langford alleges that he became a married man July 11, 1908, and for a considerable period lived happily with his wife. His happiness reached an end, however, he declares in his complaint, when Mrs. Langford was enticed away from him by Pettigrew.
