EAST TENNESSEE SHOWS INTEREST IN LIVE STOCK

The ever-increasing interest in live stock in Tennessee takes expression in different ways. This picture shows the cattle exhibited at last year's fat stock show. This show is held annually at the University of Tennessee Farm, Knoxville. At it fat steers, barrows, and wethers are exhibited. The event is made possible by the bankers of Knoxville, who put up $1,100 in premiums to be used as thought best by the committee managing the show.

"PRODUCE MORE LIVE STOCK"

That Is Injunction of Editor Who Has His Ear To the Ground

LIVE STOCK INCREASE PROFITS

To Do Well the Farmer Must Study Best Methods—This Is Made Possible at the Short Course in Agriculture at Knoxville.

In commenting upon the fact that a new era of agriculture is at hand for East Tennessee, the editor of the Journal and Tribune, one of Knoxville's dailies, has established a creed possible of adoption in any part of the state.

After expressing his pride on the section of the state in which his paper is located, the editor says:

"Now, beef cattle are bringing higher prices than ever before known in the history of the cattle raising industry. It behooves every farmer to put his lands to grass and produce dairy cattle, beef cattle, or dual purpose animals. The possibilities of dairying are growing day by day in proportion as the towns and cities increase in population, and if the dairymen will adopt scientific methods in the production of milk and butter, organize cow-testing associations in order to weed out the 'boarding ladies' in their barns and keep in touch with the State College of Agriculture in order to keep abreast of the dairying times, their problems will have been solved.

In the matter of raising beef cattle, much can be accomplished through the purchase of pure-bred sires of any of several of well-known breeds, including the Hereford, Shorthorn, Aberdeen Angus and Red Polled, the dual purpose animals being the milking strain of Shorthorns and the Red Polled.

"The College of Agriculture of the State University, through its annual short courses, offers exceptional opportunities to farmers to learn scientific methods in the raising, feeding, judging and selling of beef cattle and these opportunities should not be overlooked, for the new era of agriculture in East Tennessee is at hand."

This reference to the Short Course in Agriculture which is held at the State University every winter is well placed. Every state that is building up a strong agriculture is doing so through its Short Course. This method of instruction reaches the farmers who desire immediate assistance. The courses are planned to give that aid. This year's Short Course has for its dates January 1 to February 10. Railroad rates have made special rates.

FACTS ABOUT FARMERS AND THEIR FARMS-- AND THEIR FAMILIES

Short courses and camps for girls have been held in several counties this past year.

One girl in Bradley county helped to pay the mortgage on her father's place through her activities in the girls' club.

Eleven homes in Montgomery county have installed water works under the direction of the county home demonstration agent.

Over 100 meetings were held this past year by boys and girls in poultry clubs, at which they had regular instruction from trained men.

Federal and state publications treating farm subjects may be secured by residents of the state, free of cost, by addressing the Division of Extension, University of Tennessee, Knoxville.

At the beginning of 1917 there were over fifty counties employing farm demonstration agents and so assisting the Division of Extension of the University of Tennessee in the state agricultural educational work.

Three counties in the state have used native materials, such as shucks dyed, wheat straw, and cat-tails, for making straw braids from which to make hats. The hats the girls have made for themselves and others have cost from fifteen to forty cents each. And they were not cheap-looking hats, either!

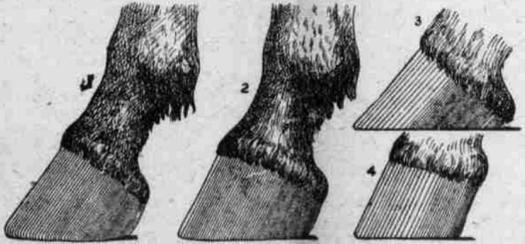

GRADE THE FARM PRODUCTS.

If farmers in Tennessee are to make the most from their farms, they must grade the products they put upon the market, according to W. A. Schoenfeld, specialist in marketing and rural organization, of the Division of Extension of the University of Tennessee, Knoxville.

He points out that at a visit which he made to Chicago he found Arkansas sweet potatoes competing with Tennessee potatoes. At that time the potatoes from Tennessee were not graded. Every size possible was in the containers from this state. The Arkansas potatoes were selling by grades as follows: Prime, 90 cents; Choice, 75 cents; Jumbo, 60 cents. The ungraded Tennessee potatoes were selling for 55 cents a bushel. It would have paid the shippers of these potatoes to grade.

This corresponds with the shippers' experience around Gleason. When they first started the shipments several years ago they got a price of $1.00 a bushel in bulk in the car. Now they find that they must grade their products to sell them. The buying public demands well-arranged products, and the farmer who heeds the signs of the times will watch the markets.

LOOK TO YOUR HORSES FEET FOR HIS STRENGTH

(Division of Extension, University of Tennessee, Knoxville.)

The value of a horse is in his feet. Poor feet make a horse valueless in proportion to the weakness of the feet. Study these pictures.

Figure 1 is given as an example of a good pastern for the fore limb. The pastern is that portion for several inches just above the hoof.

Figure 2 is given as the example for a good pastern on the hind limb. Figure 3 shows a low heel. This defect is peculiar to the fore feet, and because most of the weight of the body falls on these feet, the low heels are easily bruised.

Figure 4 shows the high heel. Such a condition takes away the elasticity from the animal's action and results in several bone diseases. It may be a part of the animal's natural make-up, or it may be caused from neglect of the animal's feet.

A knowledge of these points about farm animals is needed on every farm. Every farmer should be studying them. If possible, some member of the family should attend the annual Short Course in Agriculture held at the College of Agriculture, University of Tennessee, Knoxville. This year's course begins January 1.

"FINKING" ON THE "L."

Side Lights on the Great Street Railway Strike in New York.

"Finking" on the "L." is the pastime of the day. At least so it would seem if the attitude of the average strike breaker were to be taken as a criterion. Most of the strike breakers are doing it for the lark plus the $5 they collect for a day's whack at unionism, says the New York Evening Sun.

Unshorn, unkempt, unsoaped, are some of them. Not a few would be directed to the door marked "Exit" if they were to apply for jobs at the Interborough offices in time of peace. But it's wartime, and everything goes. They know how to swing open the gates and yank the bell rope and glare beligerently whenever a union picket gets "fresh."

That's all the Interborough requires of them. Some of them don't know whether the train is bound for South Ferry or Kalamazoo. That isn't their concern. It's up to the passenger. If they happen to catch a glimpse of a station sign they'll call out the street, but if they flash past without seeing it, why, the passenger will have to guess where he's at or the "fink" will greet for him and growl out some street that he thinks the train is at, but which may really be three miles along the way.

Some of them looked as though they'd enjoy a crap game more than banging open gates. Others looked as though they had at one time or another come into disagreeable encounter with the policemen with whom they were now in pleasant confab.

They had the most nondescript uniforms—just ordinary clothes, extraordinary at times, because, as in one instance, khaki trousers were topped by blue shirt and red cap and green tie and low cut shoes. And in this particular "fink's" lips rolled a cheap cigarette. Of course the sign prohibited smoking. But it's wartime, and everything goes.

Miners Want Their Own Union.

Miners employed by the Rockefeller interests in Colorado are flocking back to the United Mine Workers' union, according to President McClellan, Colorado State Federation of Labor. McClellan says the Rockefeller company has made big improvements in its moving picture shows and "social service," but has not advanced the wages of coal miners since the 1913-14 troubles. "There is no talk of a strike," McClellan said. "But the fact that the men in Rockefeller's mines again are joining the union means the company's 'industrial representation plan' is not all the men desire. They feel their representatives in 'Rockefeller's union' are selected rather than elected. The miners want an organization of their own."

UNION MADE GOODS.

It is now possible to purchase every article of wearing apparel for men with the union label on, and there is no good excuse for any union man not being a union man from the top of his head to the soles of his feet. With the ever increasing demand for the label a better quality of goods is being put upon the market. Demand not only the union label, but also the quality with it. Both of these can be secured, and just as soon as the merchant sees that the demand is sufficient to warrant them in handling union made goods they will do so and will endeavor to get the best to be had.
